

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

IMPERFECT OUTLINE
RICHARD PORSON.

RICHARD PORSON, the subject of this hasty sketch, was born at East Ruston in Norfolk, on Christmas-day*, 1759. He was the eldest of three brothers†. His father, Mr. Huggins

* R. P. was wont to speak of his birth day with gratitude and triumph. On the same day Sir Isaac Newton was born, 1642. They were of the same College; and the mortal remains of R. P. rest near the statue of this first of philosophers in the Anti-chapel of Trin. Coll. Cambridge; while those of RICHARD BENTLEY lie without the railing, on the north-side, of the altar.

† Henry, his second brother, was settled in a farm in Essex, and died early in life. Thomas, his youngest brother, kept a boarding-school at Fakenham, and died in 1792. His sister was married to Siday Hawes, Esq. of Coltishall in Norfolk. His mother died in 1784, aged 57; and his father in 1805, in the 74th year of his age.

Porson,

Porson, who was Parish-Clerk, and much respected, initiated him in the rudiments of his native tongue, and in the common rules of arithmetic. At nine years of age R. P. was sent to the Village-school, kept by a Mr. Summers, where he continued three years. The Rev. Mr. Hewitt, Vicar of the Parish, heard of R. P.'s extraordinary aptitude in acquiring and retaining whatever he was taught, and undertook to give him a classical training. During his boyhood R. P. was inured to a pastoral life, and afterwards, I am told, to the labours of the loom.

Proofs of a serious turn of thought in his early years are still extant; they are in the shape of hymns and grave reflections; but in no respect remarkable except in tracing out the adorable nature of the first cause.

In August, 1774, Mr. Norris, of Grosvenor-Place, an opulent and liberal gentleman, sent R. P. to Eton, and the late Sir George Baker contributed most generously towards his continuance tinuance in that illustrious school. When he entered Eton, R. P. was wholly ignorant of quantity; and, after he had toiled up the arduous path to literary eminence, he was often twitted by his quondam school-fellows with those violations of quantity which are common in first attempts at Latin verse. Our Greek Professor always felt sore upon this point. One of his best friends and greatest admirers has preserved a copy of verses, which, indeed, evince the rapid progress of his mind, but would not do honour to his memory.

The Rev. Doctor Davies, late Provost of Eton, when Head-Master, presented R. P. with a copy of Toup's Longinus as a mark of his regard for a "good" exercise. This book, R. P. was wont to say, first biassed his mind to critical researches, and BENTLEY and DAWES cherished and confirmed that strong propensity: the rest he gave himself.

At this time R. P. was deeply smitten with a predilection for scenic exhibitions; and a sort of drama, composed by R. P. while at Eton, is still in the possession of certain Ladies*.—He collated the MS. fragment of Xenophon's Anabasis, which he lost with other memoranda at Oxford, and amused himself with examining a MS. containing some of Seneca's plays, and others fathered upon him†.

At Eton, the powers of memory, which he occasionally discovered, are almost without parallel. The instances are numerous, and well attested. I shall specify one. In going up to lesson he was accosted by a boy in the

* A gentlewoman, whom I should esteem it an honour to name, has many unrivalled specimens of R. P.'s penmanship; they are intended for watch-papers, and consist chiefly of those moral sentiments from the comic and tragic poets which vicissitudes in life had deeply imprinted on his memory: or such passages as Eur. Med. 193—206., accompanied with Dr. Johnson's translation which first appeared in Dr. Burney's History of Music, V. II. p. 240.; etc.

† Optimæ in his Tragœdiæ, Troades, Hippolytus, Thyestes, Hercules Furens, Medea, Agamemnon, Œdipus. Hæ Senecæ sunt, et nunquam Choro finiuntur. Incertorum auctorum, Phœnissæ, Hercules in Œta, Octavia—quæ Choro finiuntur. RICARDUS BENTLEIUS.

form, "P., what have you got there?" "Horace:" it was instantly taken from him, and another book dexterously slipped into its place, with which R. P. proceeded. Being "set on" by the Master, he read and construed Carm. 1. x. very regularly. Observing the class in a titter, the Master said, "P., you seem to me to be reading on one side of the page, while I am looking at the other: pray, whose edition have you?" P. hesitating—"Let me see it," rejoined Doctor D., who, to his great surprise, found it to be an English Ovid. R. P. was ordered to go on; which he did, easily, exactly, and promptly, to the end of the ode. About this period R. P. was prone to a spirit of intolerance, which often discomposed his nights; and he experienced great difficulty in mollifying and subduing this inclination. What a lesson to learn is toleration!

Towards the close of 1777 he was admitted undergraduate of Trin. Coll. Cambridge. In 1779 R. P. began more systematically his critical career. Two corrections made in this year year occur in pp. 256. 303. (Theocr. Id. I, 66. Virg. Æn. III, 702.). They were very generously imparted to me by his old school-fellow, and unshaken friend through a bitter life, the very learned and amiable Doctor GOODALL, Provost of Eton. This excellent man would have honoured me with a paper containing many other corrections made by R. P. about this time; but it is mislaid. In Sept. 1781, R. P. was elected Fellow of that noble Society. The interval between this date and 1785, when he took the degree of A.M., seems to have been assiduously employed in highly useful but ungainful pursuits. It was a season, which he recollected with pleasure; and would, at times, fondly wish to live over again:—Pieriosque dies et amantes carmina noctes. In 1791 his fellowship ceased; on which heart-rending occasion he used to observe, with his usual good-humour (for nothing could depress him), that he was a gentleman living in London without a sixpence in his pocket. Shortly after R. P. was elected Greek-professor. The letter, addressed to his principal elector, in which R. P. notices both events, events, will, I trust, see light on some future day. Other letters from R. P. are in private hands, which do honour to his heart as well as to his head.

In 1795 R. P. married Mrs. L nan, who sunk under a decline in April 1797. This event is deeply to be regretted, since during this short period he evidently became more attentive to times and seasons, and might have been won by domestic comforts from that habit of tipling, which was doubtless as much a disease as the gout, and must have tended to impair a constitution naturally vigorous. Alas! πῶς τις αὐτὸν, πῶς τις ἂν Ἐπὶ τοῦ ποτοῦ παύσει· τοῦ λίαν ποτοῦ;

R. P. entertained an utter contempt of money; he was independent of circumstances. He left worldly things to worldly minds; his thoughts were elsewhere.

In company R. P. was the gentlest being I ever met with; his conversation was engaging and delightful; it was at once animated by force

force of reasoning, and adorned with all the graces and embellishments of wit. These Attic nights are gone; "but they have left a relish and a fragrance upon the mind, and the remembrance of them is sweet." He possessed a heart filled with sensibility; he was at all times willing to assist his fellow-labourers; and no scholar ever consulted him, who did not leave him instructed and delighted*. It may not be improper to select an instance of his instantaneously passing from one subject to another, which was like it, by way of illustration. It may be thought unworthy of narrative, ἀλλ' ὅμως φράσω. In Oct. 1800, two friends looked in upon R. P. at his chambers in Essex-Court, Temple, and seeing his favourite MS. spread on the table, one of them observed, I am at a loss to perceive how you can decypher these characters; R. P. intimated that the text of this codex was comparatively perspicuous. He then produced a MS. of John Chrysostom abounding in cramp contractions, and, turning to the beginning, read the first five lines which gave the title of the work :—they were astonished at the ease with which he unfolded the terminations. R. P. remarked that our D^{os}. and C^{os}. are as much abridged, only far more common ; but, determined to make himself thoroughly understood, he requested his friend to shew him a guinea ; which was done. R. P. inquired if he had ever noticed the letters on the brim. He answered in the negative ; R. P. then expounded the legend. His friend remarked, that if he might have all the guineas of those who could not make out the inscription, he should be extremely rich. Yes, replied R. P., and you would be in the situation of the hero, who Postulat ut capiat, quæ non intelligit, arma. His critical excursion appended ad Med. 139. 140. exhibits a fair specimen of his manner of discussing with friends literary matters ; it is adamant of the firmest grain wrought to the highest polish. Indeed, every thing he said and did was fraught with the most scrupulous regard for plain dealing. TRUTH was considered by R. P. as the basis of excellence ; it was the object of all his inquiries ; he felt pleasure in the search, and satisfaction in the vindication of this rare article. If detected in the slightest error, he would thank the individual who pointed it out, immediately amend it, and publicly confess it. Ἐγὼ εἶμι τῶν ἠδέως μὲν ἐλεγχθέντων, εἴ τι μὴ ἀληθές λέγοιμι· ἠδέως δ' ἐλεγξάντων, εἴ τις μὴ ἀληθές λέγοι. Οὐκ ἀηδέστερον μὲντ' ἐλεγχθέντων ἢ ἐλεγξάντων· μείζον γὰρ αὐτὸ ἀγαθὸν ἠγοῦμαι, ὅσῳ περ μείζον ἀγαθὸν ἐστὶν αὐτὸν ἀπαλλαγῆναι κακοῦ τοῦ μεγιστοῦ, ἢ ἄλλοι ἀπαλλάξαι· οὐδὲν γὰρ οἶμαι τοσοῦτον κακὸν εἶναι ἀνθρώπῳ, ὅσον δόξα ψευδής. Plato Gorg. 285. E. Laemar. = 123. Routh. = 58, 9. Findeisen. R. P. also contended that truth in every department of human knowledge was mighty, and, in spite of all artificial objects, would ultimately prevail. Καί ποτε μὲν παραχρῆμα δίκνυσι τὴν αὐτῆς δύναμιν, ποτὶ δὲ πολὺν χρόνον ἐπισκοπισθεῖσα, τέλος αὐτὴ δι' αὐτῆς ἐπικρατεῖ, καὶ καταγωνίζεται τὸ ψεῦδος. Polybius.

Amongst others, who paid their respects to the MSS. of Pseudo-Shakspeare, in Norfolk-Street, R. P. was prevailed upon by a friend to visit them. After looking at them for a short time, R. P. turned aside to survey the window and the room. Astonished at this indifference, Mr. I. requested him to put down his name among those of believers in their genuineness. At first R. P. endeavoured to excuse himself, as not being an English antiquary: at length, being importuned in a most pressing manner, he said, "Mr. I., I detest from the very bottom of my heart subscriptions of all kinds, but especially subscriptions to articles of faith." R. P.'s friend turning to him said, "Mr. P., you will always be an humourist."—Indeed, in all matters R. P. shuddered at an oath: he deemed it a wanton profanation of the name of our Creator: he contended that his bare word was sufficient. And I would have taken his bare word in the most momentous concern. But in these degenerate days "words are very rascals, since bonds disgrac'd them."

In examining an unsound passage he was most cautious; he investigated, balanced, and reconciled. He frequently caught at once the
the

the ultimate mark, at which he was aiming, and which it required the utmost nicety to hit. Some would overshoot it, others fall short of it; but his movements towards it were deliberate, the effect of each step was watched, his eye was wary, and his aim unerring. The sense being ascertained, the word, which was suggested, might not suit the context: the word being fixed, the metre might not admit it. His emendations satisfied the style, the sense, and the verse.—But, when he could not restore, he never disturbed. Conjectural criticism, if I understand the expression, is not regulated by any perceivable law; it is under the dominion of hazard; it is “a hit made at a venture,”—a game at chance: whereas in R. P.’s cures there is a correct leading principle, which influences his decisions; he propounds the degree of evidence which can be collected; weighs every authority, however faint, or complicated, or contradictory; calls in the aid of paleography to criticism, and elicits by dint of painful thinking, and severe discrimination, illumined by genius and taste, the effect desired.

sired*. It may be asked, Why all this parade about the recovery of a few old facts? What is there in truth which is not old? The grandest discovery ever made by human intellect,—the nexus naturæ,—was the demonstration of a fact as old as the creation.—NEWTON himself did not make the truths which he has established; he pointed them out to others, from whom they had been concealed.—In these severe investigations DAWES did not distinguish sufficiently between an useful hint, and a general principle; he tried but seldom how far his precepts would hold good. BENTLEY would, at times, lighten upon a passage. His corrections, in general, cost him too little trouble†. The day after he had received a copy of Dr. Davies's first edition of Cic. Tusc.‡, R. B. talked over with the editor the substance of all the emendations, which he was prevailed upon to subjoin to that edition. In the days of their friendship, J. Markland presented R. B. with a copy of his Statii Sylvæ, which he looked over with J. M. and suggested those brilliant restorations, which are registered in the margin of a copy in the custody of a friend*. As to SCALIGER, he seems to have been formed of "the porcelain clay of human kind:" in his restitutions θεῖον τι καὶ ὑπεροχὴν ἰστέι. In R. P. there was invariably "a presiding principle and prolific energy." In that celebrated canon, viz. If an iambic verse in tragedy end in a word, which makes a cretic, and the word preceding it consist of more than one syllable, the fifth foot is not a spondee,—R. P. has marked the limits, and reconciled the seeming exceptions; his proofs hang one upon another by a connecting thread; the perusal of his accurate arrangement, and nice distinctions, is one continued exertion of the mind; in reading

this disquisition we are not suffered to be idle or superficial. He gave up, I believe, the metrical arrangement of the choral odes as a hopeless business.—If his life had been prolonged for about six years, R. P. would have become τῆς Ἑλλάδος σωτῆρα καὶ πρόμαχον he would have given us some sure, sound, and ruling principles, which might have been safely left to their own operations*. But the prime grace of the Attic year is cut off:—the sun of criticism is set, and in its descent left the western hemisphere in a flood of glory.

On 25 Sept. 1808, on Sunday night, exactly as the clock struck twelve†, R. P. changed his existence, without a struggle, in

His remains were removed from the London Institution, then in the Old Jewry, to be interred in the Anti-chapel of Trinity College, Cambridge. The service at the grave was read in a most impressive manner by the present Lord Bishop of Bristol, Master of our college.

It

It was not judged proper to print the Report signed with the names of his medical friends, amongst which is that of Dr. Babington, a physician not less renowned for his professional skill than for his humanity and extensive benevolence.

Epaminondas, when upbraided by a wight with celibacy, pointed to the battle of Leuctra as his genuine offspring, which would not only survive him, but be immortal. In like manner, should a peevish and morose prattler inquire what monument of literature R. P. had erected to perpetuate his name to posterity; it may be answered with sadness, but with truth, Pauca quidem ingenii sui pignora reliquit, sed egregia, sed admiranda:—the Letters to Travis, Preface to Euripides, ed. 3., note on Med. 139, 140., and the conjectural supplement of the Rosetta stone will hand down his name as a Critic till time shall be no more.

If it were required to produce instances of restoration wrought by this second Bentley,

which cannot be contested, the emendation of Hermesianax, p. 41, might, I humbly presume, be placed foremost; then Eur. Helen. 757., (p. 226.) Æschyli Suppl. 675. 312, 3. Pers. 321, 2. The wounds, which have been unmercifully inflicted on these passages, are beyond the reach of aid from MSS. It would be blameable to omit the restoration of Alexis apud Athen. III, 107. F. (Adverss. p. 65.) which turned out to be, as nearly as possible, the reading of the Venetian MS.; and that of Lyncus apud eund. VI. 138. E. (Adverss. p. 87*.) But to do justice to these emendations the tenor of the context ought to be stated, the probable causes of the corruptions explained, and the grounds, on which the emendations rest, as connected with Greek paleography, pointed out, which require types cut for the purpose.

I cannot help remarking with great concern that some of our countrymen, who have risen to eminence since his departure, seem to grudge him the tribute of their applause. Called upon, as I am, to deliver an opinion, which is done with sincere respect for their profound erudition and unwearied research, I must confess that at this exigent moment the loss of R. P. cannot be supplied; that with him true criticism expired; and that the stars, which adorn our hemisphere in his absence, shine with those rays which have been principally borrowed from him.

Esteeming, as I do, the real critic to stand foremost in the noble band of scholars, and to be incomparably the most useful labourer in the harvest of Theology, I consider any injury offered to so illustrious an individual as interesting to society. A Lady, whose life has been devoted to the reformation and comfort of the poor, and the honour of our religion, has intruded upon our patience, with all the solemnity of oracular decision, a scurrilous libel unthought of, uncalled for; and insulted his memory with a comparison which would degrade him. I revere the lustre shed by religion on the unsullied virtues of females; I only not adore the lovely graces of female devotion*, as much as I abhor the malignant tongue of female slander. Pray, what authority have you for the foul expression “gross sensuality?” None whatever. He had one failing, but he was so great a man that I shall soon forget what it was.

Ἥδιον οὐδὲν, οὐδὲ μουσικώτερον

 Μὴ προσποιῆται, λοιδορεῖται λοιδορῶν.

As to “corrupt principles,” what do they imply? his critical morality? an invincible love of truth? an inflexible probity? unwearied exertions in the cause of literature? Or do they import a want of belief in the evidences of Christianity? An unbeliever, Madam, would not have exposed the blasphemous manner, in which Lord Shaftesbury derides the holy Scriptures. R. P. was, and he wished to be considered, a Christian. If you had witnessed the horror, with which he received the foul charge of being a suspected unbeliever, when discovered to him by a friend with the utmost delicacy, you would not have fulminated against him such anathemas:—if you had seen him in the season of affliction, when the prospect of nothing but a “steril promontory” was lying before him;—if you had heard him at this moment of dismay recite with inexpressi-

Yes, Madam, if you had ever been present, when he quoted with perfect relish from Tillotson, Barrow, Barclay's Apology, Chillingworth, and St. Augustine, passages hardly to be equalled in any language, you would not, I am sure, have applied to him these hard, unchristian words. Cease then to profane the memory of PORSON with such unsparing reproaches.—You may say that his religious creed resembled that of Dr. *Samuel Clarke: you are at liberty to think so. Will you contend that Dr. Clarke was not a Christian? Such uncharitable sentiments belong not to me. “Though truth in those controversies can only be on one side, sincerity may be on both. And I will enjoy the holy hope, that by an equal sincerity, through the power of that blood which was shed equally for all, both parties may at last find

THE English verses were given by the late Rev. Wm. Collier, B.D., Senior Fellow of Trin. Coll. and Regius Hebrew-Professor, to be translated into Greek trimeter Iambics by the candidates for one of Lord Craven's University-scholarships which was then vacant. Being on a visit to Mr. Knight's at Milton, near Cambridge, Mr. C. accidentally took up a stray No. of the * * * * * Magazine, and in turning it over he lighted on this epitaph; transcribed it, and applied it to this purpose.—With this account Mr. C. favoured me, if I recollect aright, in 1798: I have consulted most of the Journals from their commencement to this period, but, with pain I state it, to no purpose. At the time it was generally attributed to Mr. C.; and R. P. always suspected it to be the offspring of his muse. About three years before his demise R. P. showed me the foul copy, which exhibited his first expressions and corrections made in the examination-room before he re-wrote it, and permitted me to take a sort of fac-simile which is mislaid. The paper was embrowned with age. It would be highly ungenerous to point out the Homeric metre of one word, those niceties of Attic orthography which he had not then attained, and the violation of a recondite property of Iambic metre, which R. P. discovered about three years afterwards. He communicated it with his oldest and most intimate friend, the Rev. Dr. GOODALL, who in mentioning it to his pupils never omitted to attribute it to its rightful owner*. Suffice it to state that this attempt was made by a Junior A.B. nearly thirty-four years ago, and it will scarcely be doubted that this A.B. was R. PORSON†. Other juvenile exercises by R. P. are still in existence.

* There are other effusions of humour and of the species of composition which is chiefly acceptable to that stirring family, the editors of our ephemeral journals. I have examined the quotations from Latin and Greek writers, with which they are sprinkled, for emendations; and for nothing else; for he uniformly advised me not to read Newspapers. I bewail the unpropitious hours, in which four of these papers were written. His mind must have been overclouded. Certain of the Jesuits have attempted the same perilous analogies, which are contained in three of them. But this kind of writing cannot be defended by example.

About

About this period, 1782-3, R. P. proposed to republish Budæus' commentaries of the Greek language; he would have verified the references, added short notes, and a good index. This project, if it had met with due encouragement, would have banished from our public schools Vigerus, which is, comparatively, a bad book. But he was thwarted in his views.

*ii. Review of the second part of the first volume of Schutz's Eschylus. Mr. Maty's Rev. June, 1783, pp. 433—436.

In his Review for March, 1783, p. 268, Mr. Maty notices, no doubt with R. P.'s permission, that a scholar of Cambridge "is preparing a new edition of Stanley's Æschylus, to which he proposes adding his own notes, in three volumes, and will be glad of any communications on the subject, either from Englishmen or foreigners." And in his Rev. for Oct. —, p. 328, Mr. M. informs his readers that this scholar is "the author of the excellent Review of Brunck's Aristophanes. To him, therefore, to whom the edition of Æschylus is now entrusted, the learned will send their notes, which (I forgot to mention before) may be addressed to me."—Solicitous to collate the celebrated Victorian MS., then at Florence*, which Professor Salvini had inspected for the use or curiosity of Doctor Askew, R. P. proposed to visit this repository, once the seat of Medicean magnificence, and to collate this MS. "at an expense not greater than that, for which the task could have been performed by a person on the spot." After some discussion, in which a genuine critic, well known in the Primrose Path as well as the Fosse and the Walling Street, gave, I am concerned to say, his decided opposition, it was suggested by a grave man, and most wonderful scholar, then perching on the pinnacle of power, that R. P. might collect his MSS. at home*. This is alluded to in a note to his letters on Travis, p. 57. Alas! how marr'd and stinted hath his greatness been!

About this period R. P. commenced a correspondence with David Ruhnkenius†, whose preface to the second volume of Hesychius, and historical disquisition on the Greek orators, he had read with delight. R. P. stated that he was about to undertake an edition of Eschylus, and requested to be honoured with any fragments of this parent of Greek tragedy which occurred in D. R.'s body of inedited Lexicons and Grammarians that bear the stamp of authority‡. The editor of the Strasburg Sophocles had drawn the most valuable glosses in his Lexicon Sophocleum from this source. Not willing, however, to take advantage of D. R.'s unsuspecting goodness without submitting to him his pretensions for the task, he sent this restorer of Plato a specimen of his progress in emendatory criticism. In the first he achieved a restoration of Æschyl. Suppl. 675-7, which had been begun by Stanley, and, by accident, successfully followed up by Pauw, and approximated to by Heath. The light borrowed from this passage he reflected upon Plutarch, who had been woefully mutilated, Erot. p. 758. F., and made these two authors amicably conspire in healing and strengthening each other*. The other sample related to a mangled fragment of Hermesianax, 89, seq. which was in substance the same as the Latin note at pp. 41, 2. of these tracts.—D. R. showed this letter to his favourite pupil, Wytttenbach †, who applauded the good service done to Æschylus and his old friend Plutarch: yet in the excellent

* This emendation has been referred to in his note ad Ph. 800. and ably stated by a learned brother in M. Rev. for June, 1807, pp. 529-30. R. B. ad Hor. Carm. iv, xiii, 7. had furnished a model of criticism, misnamed conjectural, on the same treatise of Plutarch which R. P. has outdone. In the same way R. P. made whole a passage in Dionysius of Halicarnassus in his Diatribes ad Eur. Med. 139, 140. This restoration he had allowed to lie by him for more than four years. I put a copy of Valckenaër's Callimachea into his hands about the close of 1799 or at the beginning of 1800, some time before it was regularly imported into this country; in turning over the leaves he stumbled upon Valckenaër's attempt to correct the passage. Surprised at V.'s failure, he produced a scrap of paper, upon which his emendation had been registered, and requested me to take a copy of it in bar of accidents.

lent edition of this moralist, it has unaccountably escaped his memory; see Vol. iv. p. 29. ed. 4to=p. 42. 8vo. As to the other correction, W. intimated to D. R., who was of a most conceding disposition, that he had anticipated nearly the same alteration—ἔρχον εἶναι Ἀπόλλων

but this order of the words is not sanctioned by any MS.; whereas R. P.'s arrangement is countenanced by Bessario's Codex, and transcribers would naturally prefer ἐχρῆν or W.'s ἔχρησ' to the less common but appropriate word ἔχρησ'. Surely this is using another Critic's mental progeny, "as gypsies do stolen children—disfiguring them to make them pass for their own." Our professor, however, has very generously given W. the chief merit of this palmarian emendation.

In his answer addressed

the beginning of which I have already recorded, D. R. sent him eight leaves of foolscap, folded in a quarto form, and crowded with unpublished remains of Eschylus, which had been extracted from his Thesaurus. The vacant spaces of the autograph were occupied with R. P.'s remarks.

In the year 1797 or 1798 a calamitous event took place; πᾶς τοῦτό γ' Ἑλλήνων θεοεῖ—and well they may. A fire broke out in the house of a relative, with whom R. P. had been passing a few days. It irrecoverably destroyed this communication of D. R.; the exquisitely beautiful transcript of the Galean Photius, which by indefatigable perseverance he replaced; a copy of Kuster's Aristophanes, the margins of which were crammed with collations, notes, and emendations, which could not be retrieved; and other literary treasures. In returning to Town the day before this disaster happened, R. P. paused three or four times on the road, deliberating whether he should return for his books and papers, and once actually turned his horse towards Merton. Unfortunately, however, he persevered on his journey, and in the following night devastation accomplished its hideous work.—When his affectionate friend, Doctor Raine, ὁ φίλτατον φώνημα, whose loss is bitterly bewailed by every lover of learning, profane and sacred, opened to him this woful business, R. P. inquired if any lives had been lost: Dr. R. replied in the negative. “Then,” in the generous exaltation of despair, he said, “I will tell you what I have lost—TWENTY years of my life!

To each his sufferings: all are men
 Condemn'd alike to groan;
 The tender for another's pain,
 Th' unfeeling for his own.”

Aldine,

Aldine, first Basil, and Cambridge editions of Aristophanes, and consulted the first and second Juntas, in the libraries of his friends. A copy of the first Junta, which had been picked up for a trifle in the neighbourhood of Saxe Weimar, was given R. P. by the Rev. Cleaver Banks, whom he always mentioned with the most affectionate regard, and generally added, "Banks' library is my library." His accurate knowledge of the local situations, customs, and opinions, of the virtues, vices, and political animosities, which prevailed at this era, excited earnest hopes that R. P. would have given us a PERFECT edition of this comic Poet.—*Gilb. Wakefield, however, had an unconquerable distaste for this standard of Attic purity; that distinctness and vivacity of character in the dialogue; that stately movement of his own metre; and that glow of genius, that ethereal fire in his choral odes, which, at times, transported the poet beyond the limits of his usual execution, had no charms for G. W.—Not that I wish to defend every atom of the poet. What he says about Agatho in the Thesmophoriazuse might have been entirely in jest; and might, in that degraded state of society, have been pleasing to Athenian ears: still I cannot help turning aside from it with loathing. The retouched comedy of "the Clouds obscured, I fear, the brightest star of the Achaian firmament;" it sowed a seed, which did not immediately quicken, but which would not perish; and gradually prepared the way for the accusers of the first of moral philosophers. In this, however, G. W. was not singular; for the scenic entertainments of our national bard have even been designated—fountains of impurity; and I have met with a passage on this subject taken from a primitive father, "which would make the hassocks at the Tabernacle, like the chairs in Dioeclesian, jump for joy." See Theodorus Hyrtacenus, Ep. xxx. in notitia MSS. Paris.

Plato also does not escape the indevotedness of G. W. ; he had little or no share in his esteem : and no wonder ; for Plato was a great admirer of Aristophanes. This first of Pagan sages, concerning whom we hear so much, and know so little, had rivetted the affections of our Professor for the last six or seven years of his life. In depth of thought R. P. deemed him without a rival ; but his text, he observed, teemed with interpolations. Quo magis his, qui altioris Critices studio ducantur, dies noctesque elaborandum est, ut assidua lectione in justam Platonis consuetudinem veniant.

If the character of Dawes, as a critic, had been treated with due respect, this article would not have been thought of. R. P. considered the making of Greek verses as wholesome exercise ; it requires extensive reading and retentive memory ; and produces a facility in the application of those nice discriminations of style adopted by the Homeric, tragic, and comic poets, which have been pointed out by master-artists. R. P., however, did not encourage the

“I consider Mr. Porson’s answer to Archdeacon Travis, as the most acute and accurate piece of criticism which has appeared since the days of Bentley. His strictures are founded in argument, enriched with learning, and enlivened with wit; and his adversary neither deserves nor finds any quarter at his hands.” Gibbon’s Miscell. vol. I. 159, 60. See also G. Steevens on Shakspeare, III, 68. This is the meed of well-earned fame; it is, however, doubted whether this could have been extorted from Mr. Gibbon’s candour, if he had not felt himself defended by accident in this reply. Of Dr. Bentley’s “Remarks upon Collins,” which from “the many just observations they contain, the ready and clear solution they give of several difficulties of great moment, and the spirit of sound criticism and true learning which pervades the whole*,” are entitled to a place on the same shelf as R. P.’s letters, Mr. Gibbon very coolly observes, they are “full of learning and scurrility†:” with as little precision might a reader say, The history of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire abounds in eloquence and indecency. Indeed, the sly way of insinuating objections in the room of fair reasoning, when Christianity is concerned, and the confounding of the different ages and merits of the ancient Fathers render the caution once given by a great statesman, "never to believe Mr. Gibbon when he speaks about priests," necessary to all his readers. I will add another remark of that great orator and acute discerner of literary merit: "Gibbon," says Mr. Fox, "has quoted many books as authority, of which he had only read the preface. He produced a singular instance of this, where Gibbon had quoted a passage as being in the third book of a writer, whose work is divided into two books only. Gibbon was led into this error by the translator of the preface of the book quoted, who, in transcribing the passage, had made the same mistake." In this quotation I am obliged to trust to memory. As to his style, much as he sometimes admired it, R. P. was wont to remark that it would be a good exercise for a school-boy to translate occasionally a page of Gibbon into English.

I have collated the first five letters in this volume (pp. 1—132.) with those seven which first appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine and were addressed to Mr. Urban. It would have been a waste of time and paper to record the improvements made by R. P. in his revision of this collection: suffice it to state, that wherever Mr. Urban's printers have been more watchful than those employed by Mr. Egerton, I have not been negligent of their fame. I have also verified some of the references made by R. P., and have added a few extracts from Dr. BENTLEY.

Stephens'* edition, set out and regulated by himself alone, is now become the standard. That text stands, as if an apostle was his compositor. No heathen author has had such ill fortune. † etc." This is owing to the general inability of the editors, not to the decays of time. The Pope's Vulgate was "recensed and adjusted" by mere theologians; and the Greek text of the Protestant Pope; Robert Stephens, was, in general, settled by himself. In the early ages the Scriptures were eagerly sought, and frequently transcribed. The vast body "of Various Readings in them is not a desirable good, but an evil by accident; in Tract of time it was hardly avoidable, from Human Nature and Circumstances of Things*." The number, however, of good MSS. still extant, and in course of multiplied variations, furnish alone a decisive proof, if proof was wanted, that "the New Testament has suffered less injury by the hand of Time than any Profane Author †." That illustrious Critic and Theologian, L. C. VALCKENÄER, made a mock defence of Dr. Whitby's splendid paradox; but the posthumous specimen of those excellent annotations, which that revered scholar had made on the text of the NEW TESTAMENT, evinces the great utility of various lections taken from MSS. and the Fathers in recovering the genuine context, when the investigation is conducted by a head stored with the history of the Greek language, trained in the principles of Criticism and in the application of paleography to this service, and influenced by a heart devoted to the interests of common Christianity. Surely it is desirable that the progress of biblical literature should keep pace with the growing improvements in Criticism.—Allowing those essential doctrines, which are the objects of our faith, to have been as well understood in the early ages as they are in our times, it is submitted that human learning would be nobly employed, as the handmaid to Religion, in proving the authenticity, and unfolding the difficulties, of the sacred writings, as well as in furnishing additional evidence from well-interpreted Scripture in support of those articles which are to be measured not by the soundness of metaphysical discussion, but by the strength of religious persuasion. Indeed, when the singularities of idiom and of style in the original language of the N. T. are considered, and the decision of a SCHOLAR on this point, who had traced the Greek language from its rude beginnings to its decline and decrepitude, is gravely weighed, I am willing to believe that discoveries in the revealed word are as inexhaustible as the Divine bounty in which it originates. Be it also remembered, that DAVID RUHNKENIUS, when pressed by a friend to apply himself sedulously to sacred criticism, very modestly replied that he had not as yet proceeded farther in that route than to Demosthenes;—and that R. P., whose table was seldom without a copy of Wetstein, had examined only three passages critically:—hence it is collected that in this field, in which our ancestors have laboured with so great success, we still “may start a variety of game in every bush, if we will but take the trouble to heat for it*.” Much, I fear, is to be suffered before those speculations will be endured, much less realised. A burning fiery furnace must be traversed before a proper direction will be permitted to be given to human learning by the good liking of our governors.—I will submit a case; whether it be authentic or not, the individual, whom it may concern, can best determine. A late Prelate, venerable in years and in piety, was disposed to hold out a helping hand to individual energy in the good old cause of literature and religion; this benevolent design was checked by a confidential agent, who intimated the great danger of encouraging a scholar, who "read Greek in Mr. Porson's method (what a compliment!)." "If so," replied the good old man, "I am sorry for what I have already done; but * * *" the blank may be easily filled up. Successful virtue! illustrious disgrace! When, however, the natural infirmities of age render worth of every kind a prey to delusion, any error of judgement, though terrifying in its consequences, is of secondary consideration;

P. sometimes falls into the strain of his great model, and has unintentionally ensnared certain contemporaries by allusions to passages which, he took for granted, were well known to his readers; ad Or. 273. R. P. adds, "Ceterum verissime observat Reiskius Euripidem facile potuisse solœcismum et sibila Comicoꝝ effugere, versum sic concinnando: Ἐκ κυμάτων γὰρ ἰσῶ γαλήνην αὐθις αὐθ. Certe Aristophanis, Samyrionis, Stratididis, aculeos potuit contemnere, si sic omnia dixisset." His friend * in Crit. Rev. for Nov. 1800, p. 244. affected to think that R. P. had, in good earnest, sanctioned this transposition! After giving vent to his critical acrimony, he has added a saving clause, of which he might avail himself, if hard pressed.—Would any scholar resolve R. B.'s opinion of Joseph Scaliger's alteration ad Manil. iv, 901. into an approbation of the suggestion of that PRINCE OF CRITICS? numerous domestic virtues which served to compensate for the homely appearance of his consort,—“What a thousand pities it is that the Grecian Helen was not more like her! for if she had, Troy most certainly would never have been burnt;”—the good man, doubtless, did not construe this into a flattering opinion of his lady’s personal attractions.

Permit me to proceed a little farther. From the stricture upon Mr. Brunck’s note ad Bacch. 1123, which appears in R. P.’s appendix to Toup’s emendations, no competent judge could collect that R. P. considered the two verses either as anapæstic, or as allied to the melic systems. R. P. also designates Ammonius, vir metri callentissimus, ad Hec. 269. ed. 1. and, from Longinus, or his interpolator, ἀντὶ οὐχ ὁ τυχεῖν, ib. 671. No person, however, who has waded through that gentleman’s notes, can mistake the main drift of these compliments. In the Letters to Mr. Travis, p. 223.—“Having been extremely fond of Gregory,”—and p. 172.—“my favourite Gregory”—the allusion to—“Hæc ex Gregorio Nazianzeno, quem semper in deliciis habui”—is obvious to every resident member of our University. Once more, and I have done. In retailing the sallies of R. P.’s exquisite humour, great pains should be taken to give the truth, and the whole truth. In the Month. Rev. for May 1811, p. 58, the following exertion of courtesy is attributed, and with truth, to R. P. “Mr. S. is indeed a wonderful writer; his works will be read when Homer and Virgil are forgotten:” to which add, “but not till then.” Compare this with another specimen of undeserving praise from a different quarter: “A tragedy (the Carmelite),—the beauties of which, we will venture confidently to assert, will be admired and felt,

St. Maar †. As these scraps have not been reprinted by a friend who is by many degrees fitter for this task than myself, and whose name I should be most happy to mention, I determined to submit R. B.'s arguments on a subject to which R. P. has so forcibly alluded. After stating his recovered reading of St. Augustine, R. B. proceeds to prove to that communicative and useful Body the non-entity of this far-famed version : Unde igitur notitia et nomen istius Italicæ processit primo, et inter eruditos inolevit? Nimirum ex unico S. Augustini dicto in libello jam citato, ubi, plurimum, inquit, juvat interpretum numerositas, collatis codicibus, inspecta atque discussa * * * * * In ipsis autem interpretationibus Itala ceteris præferatur, etc. Ita editiones Augustini exhibent universæ, Itala ceteris præferatur, et hæc soli loco, huic unico vocabulo tanta res innititur : vestram fidem ! quam infirmo tibicine fulta ! Quid enim si ego dixero codices hic mendosos esse ? Quid si non dixero tantum, sed et argumentis prorsus evicero ? XXIII. Admitting, however, Itala to be the true reading, Dr. B. contends that either the context furnishes ground for a suspicion of corruption, or that the words of this eminent Father are not capable of a consistent sense. Nonne cum prioribus pugnat? Primo jubet Augustinus plures interpretationes inquirere: numerositatem illarum plurimum juvare: mox vero edicit, ut Itala interpretatio ceteris præferatur. Hoccine ut tam absurdum dederit magnus† Augustinus? Si enim Itala ista ceteris præferenda erat, frustra utique et inepte præciperet ‡, ut ceteræ illæ conquirerentur. * * * Dr. B. then proceeds to make good his supposition; St. Augustin recommended the Italic version as preferable to the rest; but adds, that in emending any copies the Greek MSS. ought to be consulted, and in case of discrepancies, the Latin should give way to the Greek exemplars. This preference tends either to weaken the credit of the supposed Italic version, or implies that the worse Greek copies preserved the genuine readings. Si enim, ut docet Augustinus, Itala illa et verborum tenax est, et perspicuitatem sententiæ servat; quid amplius in interprete desiderandum? Cur hujus loci oblitus Augustinus, Latinos quoslibet emendandos esse jubet? Quis vero in Latinis varietatibus

P. very handsomely refused to accede to the latter part of my request; and the substance of his answer

answer to the other is contained in the sequel of a note written by himself on the fly-leaf of a copy of a work entitled "My Pocket Book," 8°, 1807.; which may be seen in the library of the London Institution. "Such is the present eagerness of the public for anecdote, that, let an anonymous author tell the most scandalous and improbable falsehood of a known character, there will be no lack of readers to swallow it. In pages xii and xiii of the preface to this book, the author charges the present Greek Professor of Cambridge with writing a parody on Pope's Eloisa. This statement is certainly false; for the parody in question was printed for Faulder in 1780, as appears from the Critical Review for December 1780, and from the Monthly Review for February 1781*. If therefore Mr. Porson wrote that parody, he must have written it when he was an under-graduate, many years before he became Greek Professor. But if the author should say, that he only meant that the person who wrote the parody is now the Greek-Professor, I shall pass over the clumsiness of the expression, and only desire him to produce his proofs of the latter fact. This I know, that I have several times heard Mr. P. seriously disown all share whatever in the composition of that parody, and all knowledge of its author." Another poem entitled "An Epistle from Oberea, Queen of Otaheite, to Joseph Banks, Esq." 1774, has been improperly attributed to R. P. It was written by a late Member of Parliament well known in the walks of wit;

* It was thus announced in a sale-catalogue of the library of the late Col. Stuart for June and July, 1814; "3457. Porson's Eloisa en Dishabille (privately [re-] printed) 1801." The sight of this notice gave great pain to our Professor, and induced him to expostulate with the compiler of the catalogue, who certainly was not aware of the unsoundness of the tradition.

nor was it R. P.'s only "favourite modern poem," as those friends, who have heard him recite passages from The Pleader's Guide, etc., can testify; Vos meministis eum, Danaï, et memorare potestis.

N.B. In replying to the third edition of Mr. Travis's Letters, R. P. calculated the possible loss of temper, and the certain loss of time; and wisely resolved to relinquish the humiliating task which could add little or nothing to his fame or to this ANSWER.

A MS. version of the Gospels in the Gothic dialect, written, it is supposed, by Ulphilas Bishop of Mæsia, about about the year 360 or 370, is preserved in the public library at Upsal. R. P. was wont to remark that in an age, which teems with literary and religious impostures, a pretended counterpart to this Codex may probably be exhumed from an obscure corner of an unexplored Cloister, containing, at least, the Catholic Epistles, and furnishing irrefragable evidence in defence of 1 John, v. 7. This mischievous and impious knavery might be a bait for the hasty admirers of Mr. Travis; but it would speedily be brought to shame by the keen, deep searchings of real criticism. When I reflect with fear and trembling on the skill, which can extract poison from the most wholesome plants, as well as the propensity of certain reformed females, who are termagant divines, to exceed all the bounds of truth and decency in aspersing or misrepresenting this great man, it is but justice to his friends, the first ornaments in Church and State*, to assert, which I do most solemnly, that R. P. has repeatedly averred, with an elevated warmth, and a severe, impressive earnestness, which are felt at this moment, that “there are more sure marks of authenticity in the Bible than in any other book whatever †.” It has been often asked, What service these letters have done to our holy

* Of those personages I have but a very imperfect knowledge, but more than enough to support my assertion.—He was endeared to the Fellows of his own College; whom I should think it an honour to name. religion? It has hindered one of its cardinal doctrines from being supported by falsehood;—let it be defended with fair argument and genuine Scripture: “I would not,” says that able and intrepid Theologian, Professor Marsh, “convert Θεός into Θεοῦ, John i, 1., or ὁ ᾧν into ᾧν ὁ, Rom. ix, 5., in defiance of MSS., fathers, and versions, in order to weaken the doctrine of Christ’s Divinity; nor would I retain, in defiance of the same authority, 1 John v, 7. in order to support that doctrine.”

In 1792 appeared Schow’s collation of the only MS. of Hesychius extant, cui hoc nomine plurimum debemus. It confirmed an incredible number of emendations which had been made by R. P.; and assisted him in extricating from the misapprehensions of Musurus glosses which he had pronounced incurable.

A very learned and perspicacious Scholar had undertaken to correct the Press; after the third or fourth sheet of the Index, which was printed first, the office devolved upon R. P.†. The booksellers were Messrs. Payne (a name to be praised, as often as it is mentioned,) White, Faulder, and Edwards.

† For these particulars I am indebted to my friend E. M.

In "a short" and offensively inaccurate "account* of the late Mr. P.," it is stated that "in this edition the late Mr. Steevens counted four hundred and eighty errata,"—Gilb. Wakefield told Mr. Fox, p. 66. that Mr. S. had detected, he thought, "900 errors"—Mr. S., whose eye was uncommonly nice and faithful, and who has registered with a pencil in the margins of a copy of Warton's Pope, formerly in his collection, many hundred typographical errors, said, if I mistake not, in an auction-room, that he had reckoned up 600 errors, more or less. "But," says an excellent scholar, "whatever might be the number of errors, no blame attached to Mr. Porson; he has been heard to declare that the booksellers, after they had obtained permission to use his name, never paid the slightest attention to his corrections†." This slight aberration was, perhaps, occasioned by the cramp hand of that great scholar; but the same misnomer occurs in the Confession of Mr. Ireland jun., a copy of which R. P. used to carry about with him, observing to his friends that he had been appealed to by a person who could not spell his name. It may be added that R. P. was wont to ridicule the apologies of the believers in those forged papers, who contended that, though Shakspeare did

The questions proposed at p. 113, have been, in a great measure, answered by Mr. K. in the very learned and useful Prolegomena to Homer reprinted in Class. Journ. xiv, xv, xvi.

In 1794 came out the plays of Aristophanes, which had received great benefit from an imperfect collation of the Ravenna MS. by P. Invernizius. It completely established ninety-six of the emendations made by Dawes, and gave the greatest authority to many of R. P.'s restitutions. Iraacor codici Ravennati, qui toties quidem alias mihi mea præripuerit, nunc vero eandem lectionem, quam e Suida me Comico redditurum putabam, impudenter sibi arrogavit†. “ This very handsome and well-printed book appeared without the name of any editor in the title, without a line of preface, without a single note, without the scholia, and without the fragments*.” It was printed from the text of Stanley corrected by R. P. ; and Mr. Schutz very silyly† enriched the second edition of his text, which was designed for a lecture-book, with many of the corrections.—After the original proofs of the first five or six plays had been regularly sent to R. P., they suddenly stopped ; and, some time after, this impression came forth. It has been said, with what truth I know not, that the paper appropriated for the real edition, had been ingeniously enough employed for this copy‡. However, after a considerable interval had elapsed, the booksellers ascertained that the smaller edition was in existence.

A few copies of the Choëphoræ Glasg. apud Foulis, 1777. may occasionally be met with. The text in the main agrees so exactly with R. P.’s true edition, “ that it was manifestly taken from it. The very date betrays a

This is the genuine substratum of R. P.'s projected edition; it was given to the world with his knowledge, and, after unceasing importunity, with a sort of half-faced consent. The proprietors waited for R. P.'s short notes and his collection of the fragments; but his friends began to be impatient, and the booksellers acquiesced.—Afterwards R. P. frequently and earnestly conversed about his intended preface to this edition. R. P. had arranged the materials in his mind; I heard him twice detail the substance of them. When entreated to favour his pupil—the public—with a sight of it, he would, at times, promise to try—"but I hate and abhor composition †." Besides, the TOWNLEIAN and CLARKIAN MSS. of the Iliad and of part of Plato had arrested his attention so strongly as seriously to interrupt his ordinary disquisitions ‡.

† At Eton R. P. was inclined to use the exercise of a friend, rather than endure the drudgery of composition. He would transcribe it faithfully, without even noticing the faults: if, however, his opinion were requested, R. P. would give it and support it most satisfactorily.

‡ Since his decease we have been favoured with valuable collations inserted by the learned Peter Victorius in the margins of his books;

June, 1795. About this period it was reported that R. P. had addressed a letter to the very acute and judicious author of the Evidences of Christianity concerning his appeal to certain suspicious testimonies, which, instead of strengthening, would weaken the body of evidence in the opinion of the greater part of readers. R. P. informed me that the rumour was unfounded.

xxv. ΕΤΡΗΠΙΔΟΤ ΕΚΑΒΗ.—Londini: 1797.

This edition, in every respect worthy of the other hope of criticism, did not escape the carping reprehensions of ill-advised and unworthy resentment. A scholar †, whom R. P. sincerely esteemed for his domestic virtues and independent spirit, but to whom he was not ready to impute the gift of divination, felt indignant that his name was not recorded in the preface and notes on Hecuba, as it had been once in the Appendix to Toup. This is the fountain from which all these waters of bitterness flowed. Whatever Mr. W. might think, it was, on R. P.'s part, an earnest of tenderness;

† Tanta in eo mutandi libido fuit, ut hoc ipsum eum delectaret, mutare, etiamsi causa non esset.

R. P.

R. P. seldom condescended to elucidate* where the text was sound; when he did, like the immortal Scaliger, he was rigidly faithful; “surely no man ever construed like Porson: πολλῆς ἐστὶ πείρας τελευταῖον ἐπιγένημα.”—Here existed no ground for complaint. Quid sodes tu de me? nisi ispum de te et tuis silentium in criminis speciem trahatur, quod non extra oleas et operis fines vagarer, te et tua citaturus. Sunt enim qui hoc indignantur, se in cujusvis argumenti scriptis suas laudes non reperire †. A few days before this extemporaneous effort appeared, R. P. met the author at the shop of his friend and bookseller, Mr. Payne ‡: they conversed together very amicably on literary matters. They afterwards sanntered down to Egerton’s; thence back to Charing-Cross, where they parted as friendly as possible, each to his business or amusement. Shortly after this R. P. left Town for the country-house of a friend, where he was informed that W. was “coming out with something against him.” At this news R. P. was surprised; though not afraid, he was curious. He returned to Town immediately, where he found all the world, that is, about twenty or thirty individuals open-mouthed about this eagerly-expected pamphlet. At length the awful moment arrived; and the Diatribe extemporalis was ushered into public notice, as if it were destined to succour a sinking age, and to annihilate the dearly-earned reputation of R. P.* A copy was immediately forwarded to our Professor, who at this time was in a very languid state, owing to the oppressive heat of the atmosphere. He, however, talked it over, and proved that there was as little skill in the execution as prudence in the design; and intimated that a column or more in a morning paper would be amply sufficient to show that in all the parade of critical sagacity there was scarcely one grain of solidity.—A sincere and able friend answered Mr. W. more to his conviction than his satisfaction †. Mr. W., fully predetermined in his mind to urge on his own strictures without the least regard to the answers of others, attempted to renew the attack in a contemporary journal ‡.—But “anger has some claim to indulgence, and railing is usually a relief to the mind.”

His readers have complained, and with reason, on the conciseness of his notes. He “seldom explains his own canons so copiously as might be expected, but studies brevity too much, and does not sufficiently consult the apprehension of common readers §.” Hec. 347=342. He al-

On the eve of this stupendous tract making its appearance the members happened to meet, and in the course of the evening the President proposed that every member should give a friend, and accompany it with a suitable passage or sentiment from Shakspeare; which was agreed upon. ludes to an accurate and refined application of a canon to the tragedies, which, about fourteen years before this period, he had investigated and tried by facts, and not by the illusive and baseless fabric of metaphysical speculations. The authorities, which were supposed to militate against it, were numerous and unmanageable*. Ni vis boni In ipsa inesset forma, hæc formam extinguerent. At length a German critic † of great acuteness and metrical subtlety extorted from him that portion of the supplement; which in exactness of research, nice perception of wrong, and clearness of induction, is almost without a parallel. The generous Herman was wont to do it justice in his lecture-room; it has been hinted that this indefatigable editor had in contemplation a defence of the anapest in the third place.—Our deplored Professor vouchsafed to run it over with me; and what I then heard, to my good use, I remembered ‡.

xxx. ΕΤΡΠΙΠΙΔΟΥ ΜΗΔΕΙΑ. Cantabrigiæ, 1801.

In 1801—1805 Professor Schweighæuser favoured the world with an edition of Athenæus. A MS., which had been imported from Greece by Cardinal Bessario, and inhumed at St. Mark's, Venice, found its way to Paris during the revolution. It is the archetype of all the known transcripts of the Deipnosophist in Europe. Apprized of this acquisition, the editor sent young Schweighæuser to inspect it. The time allotted for this occupation was too short; though it proved to be quite sufficient to lessen the admiration due to "the prophetic eye of taste" which had revived unnumbered beauties inherent in fragments preserved by Athenæus. If our Professor's short notes on Athenæus had been published in 1798, or 1799, he would have been justly hailed "a diviner without magic, and a prophet without inspiration," if they had formed his only legacy to mankind.—R. P. requested his learned and good friend, the Rev^d *Richard Heber, to examine certain fragments with this codex during a short visit to Paris, from which our gifted critic collected that more might have been done to his cost; and that young Schweighæuser had, without knowing it, been very merciful.

This second and somewhat improved edition of the supplement was printed with a new title-page, for the use of those who had become purchasers of the former edition of the Hecuba; an instance of editorial probity well worthy to be imitated by our German brethren. Actuated more by a love of honesty than of book-making, Mr. Wotton published in a separate form, for the accommodation of those, who were in possession of the first impression, "Additions to the second edition of his Reflections upon ancient and modern learning;" in which Dr. Bentley's immortal dissertation upon the epistles of Pseudo-Phalaris, Themistocles, Socrates, Euripides, and fables of Æsop first appeared.

A large-paper copy was inscribed to his munificent patron, the late Sir George Baker, BRITANNIARUM ΑΡΧΙΑΤΡΩΙ; another to that keen discerner of ancient art, that intuitive perceiver of Phidian graces, the late CHARLES TOWNLY, Esq.; and one of the copies upon vellum was presented to a strenuous friend at Cambridge.

auspices of his learned successor, and of the Rev. C. J. Blomfield, A. M. the deservedly celebrated editor of Æschylus. It is earnestly hoped that the world will be favoured with another volume of emendations drawn from the margins of our late Professor's reserved volumes, which are happily in the Library of that noble Society. His beautiful transcript of the Gælian Photius is amongst them. His papers on Aristophanes have been intrusted to my much-valued friend, P. P. Dobree, A. M. Fellow of Trin. Coll.*

Whether R. P. left a transcript of the Hippolytus prepared for the Press, I cannot ascertain. There was a copy of Portus' Doric Lexicon in the London Institution, in which were loose papers of R. P.

A copy of the Ajax of Sophocles, which was in the collection of the universally-regretted Dr. Raine, is emended throughout by the pencil of R. P. This eminent teacher had employed himself in moments of leisure upon a schediasm on the use of the Greek accentual marks, in which R. P. was often consulted. The papers were well calculated to facilitate the attainment of this necessary branch of Greek literature.—Indeed the benevolent emotions, which actuated that family in consulting the comforts, and in promoting the literary views of our lamented Professor, entitle the name of RAINÉ to be inscribed on the same column as that of PORSON.

R. P. meditated a supplement to Kuhnii' Pausanias,

* The hints registered by R. P. in the margins remind us now and then of what A. Gellius said of Nigidius Figulus; "anguste perquam et obscure disserit, ut signa rerum ponere videas ad subsidium magis memoriæ suæ quam ad legentium disciplinam."

by

by which Facius' edition would have been rendered useless.

R. P. presented the editor with his interleaved copy of DAWES, on condition that he would undertake an edition of the Miscellanea Critica. He submitted to him his papers on the most arduous part of this province in July, 1808, when R. P. very kindly intimated that he would communicate a few notes!—It is now in the Cambridge-press.

References to communications, most of which have appeared since R. P.'s decease.

this restoration appeared to take its place coolly and silently. Since that impression the passage has either absconded, or I am not sharp-sighted enough to find it in the copy which I have examined.

As to the present collection, part of it, viz. from pp. 2—157. was made during the life-time of our Professor, and submitted to his inspection. No doubts were entertained concerning the genuineness of the articles; but I was anxious to obtain his sanction, which was not withheld.—I beg leave to tender my grateful acknowledgements to the Rev. MARTIN DAVY [M.D.], D.D., Master of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and to the Rev. Edward Malby [E. M.*], D. D., for their invaluable contributions; to the Rev. P. P. Dobree [P.P.D.], Fellow of Trin. Coll. Camb., who, τῷ ὄντι τὰ τῶν φίλων ἡγούμενος κοινὰ, supplied me with numerous and most important papers; and to the very learned and communicative Greek Professor of Oxford, who furnished me with the long-sought-for extract from Lewis' Essay on the consecration of Churches; to R. Durræ, Esq., the biographer of Raphael, for favouring me with R. P.'s autograph; to Mr. E. H. Barker, for procuring me a sight of the printed intelligence in that work; and to the Rev. Dr. S. Parr, the Champion of ancient literature and humanity, who honoured me with a copy of emendations for which I had languished more than eighteen years.

ἄσπερ γὰρ ἵππος εὐγενής, κὰν ᾗ γέρον,

* Our lamented Professor was with his sincere friend [E. M.] about Midsummer 1804, and again in the autumn of the following year; staying about ten days at each time. During these visits the corrections with which I have been favoured were communicated. See Index. v. POURSON.

mitted to R. P. in April 1808, with which he was highly gratified.—Here allow me to express my sentiments of regard for the House of Lackington, Allen, etc., as well for the facility of access to their valuable repository, with which I was at all times indulged during my residence in Town; as for allowing themselves to be prevailed upon to make the first offer of part of BENTLEY'S Library, which fell into their hands at two different times, to the Right Hon^{ble} the Trustees of the British Museum, in preference to private collections of less extensive utility. They behaved most handsomely on both occasions; they knowingly disposed of the volumes for less than a moiety of the sum which they could have gained for them from other quarters. It is but justice to this House to add that when, in the heat of negotiation, it was insinuated that the value of the collection was greatly diminished by an individual, who had previously inspected them, they replied in the spirit of a better age, that the books were their property, and that they were not answerable to any person for the access which they had given that individual to them. Still this supposed ΚΑΛΛΙΣΤΟΝ ὈΝΕΙΔΟΣ would have damped his zeal in the good old cause, if he had not been comforted and encouraged to persevere in it by the cheering approbation of Doctor RAINE and Professor PORSON.

I almost forgot to mention that in conversing with a North Briton concerning this national acquisition, R. P. portrayed the prominent features of Bentley's literary character with a justness and familiarity, which so warmed the plain, honest hyperborean, that, before they parted, he ventured to inquire if Dr. Bentley were not a Scotchman.

N. B. I have omitted to mention that I used the Cambridge edition of the Hecuba.

At p. 189. it is stated that his illustrious and benevolent friend had anticipated five restorations which occur in R. P.'s appendix to the Critic of Cornwall; it may not be impertinent to enumerate a few emendations of the text of an ignoble poet, suggested by Mr. Tyrwhitt*, which had been preoccupied by a Critic who ranks with the revivers of the old Latin poets—N. Heinsius and WITHOFIUS.—“ In Mathematics the same discoveries have been made by different men, who seem rather to have coincided with, than to have followed, each other.” So it is in real Criticism. After the celebrated THOMAS TYRWHITT had prepared for the press his preface to Pseud-Orpheus de Lapidibus, a copy of that poem edited by Gesner, which had been bequeathed to him by his regretted friend S. Musgrave, came into his possession. In the margin Mr. T. found twenty of his emendations completely confirmed by this Critic, and five corroborated in part; one also of the former, as he learned from the margin, had been anticipated by Koën, which had escaped Mr. T.'s notice: "Hic igitur utriusque, tam KOENII quam MUSGRAVII conjecturas simul subjiciam; mihi ipsi serio gratulaturus, si quantum de inventionis gloriola amisisse videar, tantum roboris et firmitatis suspicionibus meis ex conspirante talium virorum judicio accessisse existimetur." It is gratifying to our best feelings to see mind conspiring thus with mind in the great work of emendatory criticism. It would, doubtless, have afforded this pre-eminent scholar and accomplished gentleman additional satisfaction to see his rectitude of thinking established by another acute veteran in literature, Jo. Schrader; whose Obs. and Emendat. had not fallen in his way*. I have noticed the instances of trifling, as well as of important, coincidence.

* The brother of the venerable R. Tyrwhitt, Fellow of Jesus Coll. Cambridge; Ζηλῶ σε, γίγσκ, Ζηλῶ δ' ἀνδρῶν, εἰς ἀκρίτους εἰς ἐξίτητας ἀγῶνι, ἀελλίης· Τοῦς δ' ἐν τιμαῖς ἦσαν Ζηλῶ.

In the inestimable appendix to the Exercitationes in Euripidem, printed at Leyden 1762, Musgrave has noticed ticed thirty-one restorations “quæ Lipsiensis subtile semper, aliquando etiam felix, ingenium occupaverat.” And since Reiske had (1763) tarnished his critical reputation by his frolics upon Sophocles*, the learned annotator on Euripides thought proper to preserve those unconscious coincidences, “quia in hac sylloge rationum momenta adjecta sunt, quibus Reiskiana destituuntur; deinde, quia novo Auctori libentius assensuri videbantur, qui Reiskio forte diffident.”

Emendations gained in a different way would have been appended by way of contrast: since, however, this volume is already swelled to a size which was not foreseen, they will probably find a place in the sixth number of the Museum Criticum.

A would-be translator of Plato, who “without staying to learn even the inflexions of Greek words, has plunged to the very bottom of Pagan philosophy †,” dared to revile his Redeemer by an appellation too horrible to be exhibited. Shocked by this proneness to blaspheme from the mere love of blaspheming, R. P. reprobated the fell impiety in a torrent of keen, resistless eloquence which would have searched the heart and reins of the most besotted enemy to our holy religion. The occasion, you will allow, would justify the application of St. Paul’s rebuke of Elymas the sorcerer.—

† It is said that the Hierophant of this mystic cell, who is hand and glove with Plato, once ruminated with tranquil satisfaction on the glorious uncertainty of the meaning of Δνεί it was supposed to teem with recondite lore, which the lovers of wisdom would accept with gratitude. At length R. P. was consulted, and at the touch of Ithuriel’s spear the gratifying delusion vanished. This threatened ruin to the craft; but their apprehensions were soon dispelled by the insinuation that poor Porson was one of the malevolent and unenlightened. See D.R. ad h. in Cer. 122.

P. warmly recommended D. R.'s analysis of the meaning of ἀγαλμα ad Tim. pp. 4—8, refers to it ad Hec. 1255., and used to point out to friends his restoration of Eupolis which has since been published by Professor Gaisford ad Hephæst. p. 278. [Sueton. de illustribus Grammat. p. 949. ed. Oudendorp. Πανὸς ἀγῆμα—lege, ἀγαλμα. R. B.]; but R. P. esteemed that upon θαλλὸς pp. 136—139. a model; he deemed D. R.'s alteration of Asclepiades' epigram at the conclusion to be an improvement, not a restoration. I suggested that Scaliger had left in the margin of his copy of the Greek Anthology ἡ θαλλῶ—which, he thought, would turn out to be nearer to the true reading.—As an instance of R. P.'s readiness to promote general literature, an anecdote is subjoined, which, on every other account, ought to have been suppressed. A collection of D. R.'s tracts, printed at Leipzig, arrived soon after the publication of a similar work in this country, which contained Dissertatio de tutelis et insignibus navium. Not having been heard of before, it was read with avidity. Shortly after R. P., handing a copy to the editor, observed that he would find in it something new, and pressed the expediency of reprinting it immediately. It was replied that a friend had furnished him with a copy already, and submitted that from internal evidence it was suspected not to be D. R.'s. The celebrated Professor, no doubt, had communicated the extracts from inedited Lexicons and Scholia, and had retouched the Latinity, but nothing more. This suspicion has been confirmed by the learned Wyttenbach in Bibl. Crit. P. xii. p. 90. If I had been aware that a Legislator so addicted to Greek could be found in those days, I might have solaced my woes by fancying, at least, that I lived in the age of Pericles.—I am no politician; my fervent prayer is that that grim tyrant, whose soul is incarnadined with human blood, may not contaminate our soil:—the murder of Wright pleads trumpet-tongued against him.

In discussing the construction of the third verse in the Alcaic stanza, R. P. did not accede to the distinction made by an illustrious scholar in M. Rev. for Jan^y 1798, between the third line of the Greek and that of Horace; and could not admit the alterations and arrangement of the Scholion in Athen. xv, 695. A. which occur at p. 10. He then gave me, written with a pencil, the shattered, but beautiful, fragment of Alcæus alluded to by Plutarch, preserved in the *Etymologicon MS. STRANGER, who'er thou art, that view'st this tomb,

Know, that here lies in the cold arms of death
The young Alexis: gentle was his soul
As sweetest music: to the charms of love
Not cold, nor to the social charities
Of mild humanity: in yonder grove
He woo'd the willing Muse: Simplicity Stood by and smil'd: here ev'ry night they come,

And with the Virtues and the Graces tune
The note of woe; weeping their favourite Slain in his bloom, in the fair prime of life:
"Would he had liv'd!"—Alas! in vain that wish Escapes thee: Never, Stranger, shalt thou see
The youth;—he's dead:—the virtuous soon-

ART. I. Christiani Godofr. Schütz in Æschyli
Tragædias quæ supersunt ac deperditarum Fragmenta Commentarius. Vol. I. in Prometheum vinctum et Septem adversus Thebas. Halæ, impensis Joannis Jacobi Gebaveri, 1782. Pagg. 412.

IN my* Review for February last, I gave an account of the first volume of Mr. Schutz's Æschylus, or rather of half the first volume, as the two parts of this work already published compose but one volume, and are intended by the editor to bind up together. The annotations comprise something more than four hundred pages, and are taken up in explaining the difficult passages, in vindicating or censuring, as occasion requires, the plot, conduct, and expressions of the author, and in proposing and defending his own

emendations,

emendations, where the discussion of the reasons was too long to be commodiously subjoined to the text. He has not busied himself in this commentary with collecting similar passages from other authors, that being a labour he reserves for his historical apparatus. To his notes on the Prometheus Mr. Schutz has annexed five excursions. 1. The history of Prometheus, his genealogy: various accounts of the quarrel between him and Jupiter, etc. 2. On the account of Atlas, given by the chorus, vs. 425—435. 3. On the invention of Fire, attributed to Prometheus. 4. On the wanderings of Io, as related by Prometheus; a geographical dissertation. 5. On the design of the Drama, and its management. Mr. Schutz thinks the design was to inspire the audience with a zeal for liberty and a detestation of tyranny. In the Septem a. Theb. he has been less liberal, and given us only two excursions. 1. The history of Œdipus and his family. 2. On the design and management of the Drama. I am, I must confess, rather at a loss to know why these observations are separated from the main body of the commentary. They would have been as easily read, or turned over without reading, if they had been inserted in their proper order. Nor can it be said that they exceed the length of the other notes so much as to render this process necessary. Neither of the excursions of the second play is so long as the note on Prometheus, vs. 49. The third note on the Prometheus scarcely contains a page. Perhaps, as the learned editor professes in his preface (p. viii.) diligently to have imitated Mr. Heyne's method of publishing and commenting, he was led by his example in this instance. Mr. Heyne in his edition of Virgil (an edition which, says Mr. Brunck*, deserved better paper) has subjoined both the various readings and explanations to the text; and consequently has, with reason, thrown the longer dissertations to the end of each book. But this reason cannot be alleged in Mr. Schutz's case, who has printed only the various readings in the same page with the text. With respect to the annotations, they are in general learned and judicious; and display a competent acquaintance with other authors, and, what is of more consequence, with his own. That miserable critic Pauw, in whom singular ignorance and as singular arrogance were combined, Pauw, I say, having observed that all other authors, that speak of Prometheus's punishment, mention Caucasus as the place of confinement, could not persuade himself that Æschylus would differ from such a cloud of witnesses in so material a point, and proposed some absurd emendations to reconcile his author with the multitude. But Mr. Schutz has actually observed, p. 10. that, though it be not necessary for the ancients to be always consistent in their Mythology, yet Æschylus is not in this matter at variance with other writers, or at variance only in part. For, according to Æschylus, Prometheus is twice bound; first to a rock in Scythia, next to Mount Caucasus. This appears from Mercury's speech to him (vs. 1025—1029), where he is told that Jupiter with thunder would rend the rock to which he was now affixed, and cast him down into Tartarus; from which, after many years, he should again emerge to light, and be continually preyed upon by Jupiter's eagle. Though Æschylus has not mentioned the place of this second confinement, yet it is manifest from a passage in Attius (who translated the Prometheus solutus), that Prometheus was represented as bound to Caucasus; and that Attius did not change the scene of action, Mr. Schutz has proved from a passage of Cicero (Tusc. Quæst. ii. 10.). Mr. Schutz, in his second excursion, proposed to read, vs. 428—430, "Ἀτλανθ', ὃς αἶαν, ὑπειρέχων σθένος Κραταιὸν, ἑράνιον τε πόλον Νώτοις [ἑρείδων] ὑποστενάζει. where the editions have αἶεν ὑπείροχον, and omit ἑρείδων.

There is a very corrupt and difficult passage in the Sept. a. Theb.

Καὶ τὸν σὸν αὔθις πρόσμορον ἀδελφεὸν,
Ἐξυπτιάζων ὄνομα, Πολυνείκης βίαν,
Δίς τ' ἐν τελευτῇ τῆνομ' ἐνδατέμενος, Καλεῖ.

Mr. Brunck (mindful of the poet's observation, *Ulcera possessis alte suffusa medullis, non levior manu, ferro sanantur et igni)

[* Claudian, in Eutrop. II, 13, 4.]

inserts his conjecture in the text, Καὶ τὸν σὸν αὖθις ὀμόσπορον κακοῖρόθῳν. This emendation Mr. Schutz justly thinks too bold, and modestly proposes his own conjecture in the notes.

Καὶ τὸν σὸν αὖθις πρόσμορον ἐς ἀδελφεὸν

Ἐξυπτιάζων ὄμμα—

Δύστηνον αὐτῷ τοῦνομ', etc.

Yet this does not seem entirely to remove either the difficulty or the corruption.

I shall now take the liberty of making a few addenda and corrigenda for the use of the learned editor, if he thinks them worthy of being noticed in an Appendix. H. Stephens (n. on Prometheus, v. 28.) had observed that some MSS. had ἐπηύρω, but that Eustathius preserved the vulgar reading. The place in Eustathius, which gave Abresch (Observ. on Æsch. p. 4.) so much trouble, is in Iliad H. p. 675. l. 49.—Prometh. vs. 541. The editor has been led into a mistake by too close an adherence to Brunck's edition. A line is wanting to complete the antistrophe, as will manifestly appear to any one who shall only compute the number of verses. This defect should have been marked with asterisks. Mr.

Brunck

Brunck has since corrected his error in a note on Euripides, Bacch. 1164.—Vs. 795. Ἡ ἐγγράφη σὺ μνήμοσιν δέλτοις φρενῶν ‘Grave on the tablet of thy memory.’ Mr. Schutz gives us a list of similar passages from Bern. Martinus (Var. Lect. p. 205.), but I am surprised he should not see that the example from Aristophanes (Vesp. 536.) is nothing to the purpose. He has quoted, μνημόσυνα γράφωμι ἐγώ instead of μνημόσυνα γράφομαι ἐγώ which simply signifies, ‘I will write memorandums.’—He is also mistaken when he says that all the MSS. and edd. have in Sept. a. Theb. vs. 55. ἔλιπτον, whereas Aldus and Robortellus have ἔλιπον.

It is strange that in the same play, vs. 582, he has proposed as his own conjecture, Ἡ θεῶν ἔργον, which is the reading of Robortellus’s edition. The vulgar reading is, Ἡ τοῶν ἔργον.

On the whole, I hope this edition will meet with encouragement from the learned; as the author has manifested no inconsiderable degree of abilities and diligence in the execution.

BEFORE I give an account of the editor's merits, it may not be improper to say a word of the excellencies and defects of the author; especially as some modern critics have thought proper not only to greet him with the title of a scurrilous and indecent buffoon, but to wonder how such monstrous farces could be endured by the chaste ears of an Attic audience. That many

many should have been greatly exasperated with Aristophanes, for publicly exhibiting Socrates on the stage, and making him speak and act in a manner most inconsistent with his known character, is not surprising; but as the accusation urged by some against the poet, of being instrumental to Socrates's death, has been substantially refuted by many critics; so the present editor has very judiciously observed, with regard to the other part of the charge, that Socrates is not so much the object of ridicule in the comedy of the Clouds, as the philosophers in general, who, of whatever benefit the lessons and example of Socrates himself might be to the state, were, from their idle lives, their minute, ridiculous, and sometimes impious disquisitions, highly prejudicial to their disciples, and, by consequence, to the public. If, says Mr. Brunck, Aristophanes had really in the smallest degree contributed to the death of Socrates, it is not credible that Plato would have introduced them in his Symposium, sitting together at the same table; it is not credible that he would have been so great an admirer admirer of him as to write an epigram in his praise, containing a most extravagant compliment.—Missa igitur hæc faciamus. Of the indecency, which abounds in Aristophanes, unjustifiable as it certainly is, it may however be observed, that different ages differ extremely in their ideas of this offence. Among the ancients, plain-speaking was the fashion; nor was that ceremonious delicacy introduced, which has taught men to abuse each other with the utmost politeness, and express the most indecent ideas in the most modest language. The ancients had little of this. They were accustomed to call a spade a spade; to give every thing its proper name. There is another sort of indecency, which is infinitely more dangerous; which corrupts the heart without offending the ear. I believe there is no man of sound judgement who would not sooner let his son read Aristophanes than Congreve or Vanbrugh. In all Aristophanes's indecency, there is nothing that can allure, but much that must deter. He never dresses up the most detestable vices in an amiable light; but generally, by describing them in their

their native colours, makes the reader disgusted with them. His abuse of the most eminent citizens may be accounted for upon similar principles. Besides, in a republic, freedom of speech was deemed an essential privilege of a citizen. Demosthenes treats his adversaries with such language as would, in our days, be reckoned scurrilous enough; but it passed, in those days, without any notice or reprehension. The world is since greatly altered for the better. We have, indeed, retained the matter, but judiciously* altered the manner. In the management of his* plots too, it must be owned, Aristophanes is sometimes faulty. It ought however to be observed, that his contemporary comic poets did not pique themselves upon the artful management of the plot. Aristophanes has therefore the usual failing of dramatic writers, to introduce speeches, and even scenes, not much conducing to the business of the drama. But if the only use of the plot be, as the great Bayes has decided, to bring in good things, our poet will stand totally clear on this head of the charge, and the Knights may be mentioned as an honourable exception even to this censure, as the design of the play, to expose Cleon, and to turn him out of his place, is admirably supported from beginning to end.—To sum up Aristophanes's character, if we consider his just and severe ridicule of the Athenian foibles, his detestation of the expensive and ruinous war in which Greece was engaged, his pointed invectives against the factious and interested demagogues, by whom the populace was deluded, "who bawl'd for freedom in their senseless mood;" his contempt of the useless and frivolous inquiries of the Sophists; his wit, and versatility of style; the astonishing playfulness, originality, and fertility of his imagination; the great harmony of versification, whenever the subject required it, and his most refined elegance of language; in spite of Dr. Beattie's dictum, we shall look over his blemishes, and allow that, with all his faults, he might be a very good citizen, and was certainly an excellent Poet.

The

The learning, industry, and sagacity of Mr. Brunck are well known to the literati, by his elegant editions of some of the Greek tragedies, the Analecta Veterum Poetarum, and Apollonius Rhodius. The present volumes are nearly of the same size with the Analecta; but the type, in which the text is printed, is the same with that of the Greek tragedies. I am told most readers complain of the diminutive size of the character, and I must confess I should have been better pleased if the editor had employed the same type in this work as in the Analecta; it would have spared the reader's eyes, and, perhaps, have rendered the typographical errors fewer than they are at present. Mr. Brunck has had for the use of this edition (besides all the former editions of any consequence) the collations of many manuscripts; in the Plutus, Nubes, and Ranæ, five (the collation of one does not appear but in the Addenda); in the Equites, Acharnenses, Aves, and Lysistrata, three; in the Vespæ, Pax, and Ecclesiazusæ, two; in the Thesmothiazusæ, but one. By the help of these manu-

manuscripts, the observations of critics, and his own reading, he has been enabled not only to purge the text from innumerable usurpations, but sometimes to supply chasms in it: an instance or two of which I shall give in the progress of this article. The ingenious critic apologizes (or rather does not apologize) for having left some faulty readings in the text (which either critical sagacity, or the assistance of MSS. would have removed) on account of the great hurry in which he was obliged to write his notes. To me, I own, this reason seems not entirely satisfactory.—“Quod olim librorum descriptoribus sæpissime evenit, id et ego quandoque passus sum; nec hujus inconsiderantiæ necesse duco ut me purgem, veniamque petam; quin mirari subit lætarique bonam fortunam frequentioribus istiusmodi lapsibus mihi cavisse; maxime quum recordor, partem haud minimam istarum fabularum a me descriptam iterum fuisse, dum in Museo meo vel ludebat filius meus, quo animum meum nihil magis advertit oblectatque, vel confabulabantur boni quidam viri, qui quot fere diebus horisque

matutinis ad me visere solent."—Tantamne rem tam negligenter? I think in such a case I should have sent Master Brunck out of the room. Pugh! says Mr. B. (or I suppose would say, if he read Shakspeare) "He talks to me that never had a son." But to be serious: What right has any man to publish a work of this kind in a hurry? Mr. B., I believe, is not in that unfortunate situation, which some learned men have experienced, to be obliged to publish as fast as the avarice or tyranny of booksellers required. There have too been some writers who, in publishing a book, have had a provident eye to the future, and taken care to reserve a sufficient quantity of additions to adorn the second impression. But this gentleman's character and circumstances will not suffer us to entertain the slightest suspicion, that he will ever change from Mr. Brunck into Simonides. (Vid. Aristoph. Pac. 697.)—Mr. Brunck, in his notes, is frequently engaged with the Parisian Professor, and the flower of the French critics, as he calls them, (to wit) Messrs. Vauvilliers and Dupuy, the former

of whom lately published an edition of Sophocles, the latter has passed some censures upon Mr. Brunck's critical works. Thus far, perhaps, he may be readily excused, 'Ὄς ἐχ' ὑπάρχων, ἀλλὰ τιμωρέμενος: but I am at a loss to account for the asperity with which he treats Kuster and Bergler, to the latter of whom he is scarcely more merciful than he was to Mr. Shaw in his edition of Apollonius. Bergler with him is fungus, stipes, bardus, and what not. If Mr. B. is better qualified than Kuster and Bergler to publish Aristophanes (as doubtless he is by far), "let him give God thanks, and make no boast of it;" but why triumph over men who are not in a condition to return the attack? Παῦε, παῦ', ὦ δέσποθ' Ερμῆ, μὴ λείγῃς· Ἀλλ' ἴα τὸν ἄνδρ' ἐκείνον, ἔπερ ἴστ', εἶναι κάτω*.

I now proceed to give some instances of the improvements made in this edition. The plan of the Lysistrata is as follows: the women, grieved at the long continuance of the war, seize the acropolis, where the public money was kept, and resolve to keep the men at a distance till a peace shall be concluded. Upon this a dialogue ensues between Lysistrata and Probulus, the heroine and hero of the play.

V. 487. "Ὅτι βελόμεναι τὴν ἀπρόπολιν ἡμῶν ἀπεκλείσατε μοχλοῖς. In some other editions it is printed τὴν πόλιν ἡμῶν ἀπεκλείσατε τοῖς μοχλοῖς. Mr. Brunck has inserted very justly Dawes's emendation in the text, "Ὅτι βελόμεναι τὴν πόλιν ἡμῶν ἀπεκλείσατε τοῖσι μοχλοῖσιν. The corruption, no doubt, arose from the explanation of the scholiast being written above the text: ἡ πόλις of itself signifies the acropolis. I cannot help submitting it to Mr. Brunck's judgement, whether in Plutus 772, instead of the vulgar reading κλεινὸν πῆδον, we should not read κλεινὴν πόλιν from Stephanus Byzant. v. Ἀθηναί. But perhaps Hemsterhuis has sufficiently defended the other reading; for I must own, though with the utmost fear of incurring Mr. Brunck's displeasure (vid. not. in Plut. 327.), that I am not possessed of Hemsterhuis's edition.

v. 498. Ἡμεῖς ὑμᾶς σώσομεν, ΠΡ. ὑμεῖς; Α. ἡμεῖς μέντοι.

Π. σκέτλιόν γε

Α. Ἄλλ' ἀποδεκτῖα ταῦτ' ἐστὶν ὅμως. Π. Νῆ τὴν Δήμητρ', ἀδικόν γε.

Ἄλλ'

'Αλλ' ἀποδεκτία is a conjectural emendation, first inserted in the Venetian edition; ingenious enough, but wrong. The first edition has 'Αλλ' ἀποκτία, which comes nearer the true reading, restored by Mr. B. from two MSS. 'Αλλὰ ποιητία.—But the MS. not only amends but supplies the text: for Mr. B. has inserted the following verse upon the authority of the MS. after verse 498.

Α. Ὄς σωθήσει κἂν μὴ βέλη. Π. Δεινόν γε λέγεις. Α. Ἀγανακτεῖς. Ἀλλά π. etc.

Mr. Brunck is not in general very gracious to Kuster, when he finds him negligent in smaller matters. But what would he have said had he known, that in the very manuscript*, which Kuster used, not only the true reading of the third verse was preserved, but the second verse fairly and plainly written?—Though he might have guessed something of the kind from the scholiast, to whose words a part of the verse in question is prefixed.

V. 519. Ὁ δέ μ' εὐθύς ὑποβλέψας ἔφασκεν· κ'εἰ μὴ τὸν στήμονα νήσω.—Mr. Brunck rightly observes, that the copula has no business

before εἰ; he therefore reads, 'Ὁ δ' ἔμ' εὐθύς ὑποβλέψας φάσκειν ἄν· Εἰ μὴ τὸν στήμονα νήσεις (νήσεις from a MS.)· I should rather read, 'Ὁ δ' ἔμ' εὐθύς ὑποβλέψας ἄν ἔφασκ'· Εἰ μὴ etc.

v. 529, seq. A. Σιάπα. Σίγ' ὃ κατάρατε, Π. σιωπῶ ἔγω.

A. Καὶ ταῦτα καλύμματα φέρε

Περὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν· μὴ νῦν ζώην· ἀλλ' εἰ τοῦτ' ἐμπόδιόν σοι.

Παρ' ἐμοῦ τοῦτ' τὸ κάλυμμα λαβὼν, ἔχε, καὶ περιθου περὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν, —Κᾶτα σιάπα.

To enter into an examination of the tautology, the absurdity, the metrical defects, and the want of syntax in this sentence, as it now stands, would waste too much time and paper. Suffice it to say, that the editor has happily restored the genuine text by the aid of MSS.*

A. Σιάπα. Π. Σοί γ', ὃ κατάρατε, σιωπῶ ἔγω καὶ ταῦτα κάλυμμα φορέσει Περὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν; μὴ νῦν ζώην. A. Ἄλλ' εἰ τῆτ' ἐμπόδιόν σοι, etc.*

In the Nubes, after v. 969. Mr. B. has inserted a verse, which Mr. Valckenaer first discovered to belong to this place (from Suidas, v. χιάζειν.)

Εἰ δέ τις αὐτῶν βωμολοχεύσαιτ', ἢ κάμφειέν τινα καμπήν, [Αὐτὸς δείξας, ἐν δ' ἀρμονίαις χιάζων ἢ σιφνιάζων.] etc.

[* quibuscum concordat MS. Trin. Coll. Cantab.
 R, P, Append, ad Toupe. in Suid, p. 503.]

The Eccles. v. 621, 622. stand thus in the common editions :

*Π. Οὐχὶ μαχοῦνται. Β. Περὶ σοῦ. Π. τοῦ μὴ ξυγκαταδαρθεῖν.
Β. Καὶ σοι τοιοῦτον ὑπάρξει.*

Instead of this latter fragment, Kuster's edition has, Καὶ σοι τὸ περὶ τέτων δὴ μάχεσθαι. These Mr. Brunck has restored to sense and metre by slightly altering the reading of the MS. Π. Οὐχὶ μαχῶνται; Β. Περὶ τῷ; Π. Θάρρει, μὴ δέισης ἔχὶ μαχῶνται. Β. Περὶ τῷ; Π. τῷ μὴ ξυγκαταδαρθεῖν καὶ σοι τοιοῦτον ὑπάρξει.

In the Thesmophoriazusæ, the women are gathered together to consult about some method of punishment for Euripides, who had so grossly traduced and scandalized them on the stage. When the assembly is met, the herald speaks to this effect, (v. 372.) "Hear every one; the female senate decreed (Timoclea was president, Lysilla clerk, Sostrata speaker) to hold an assembly early in the morning, on the middle day of the Thesmophoria:" Ἐκκλησίαν ποιεῖν ἕωθεν τῆς μέσης τῶν Δεσμοφορίων, ἣν ἄλλοις ἔσθ' ἡμῖν σχολή. So Kuster's edition. Davies (on Cicero de Legg. I. 10.), and Spanheim (on Callimach. H. in Jov. 84.)

quotes the latter verse to prove that ἄλις may be joined with a nominative. Dawes (Misc. Crit. p. 235.), perceiving a solecism in this reading, tacitly altered it to εἴγ' ἄλις—But the sense of the passage is not at all assisted by this alteration. “The senate decreed to hold a meeting—if there is leisure;” rather, “if there should be leisure.” Neither could the herald be ignorant, when he proclaimed this, whether they had sufficient leisure or not. The first edition (by Junta) has *ἦν ἄλισθ' ἡμῖν σχολή which approaches very near the true reading restored to the text from the MS. ἦ μάλιστα ἡμῖν σχολή. “on which day we are most at leisure.” The third day of the Thesmophoria was a fast (vid. Athenæum VII. p. 307. F.).

In the Pax, when Trygæus and the chorus are drawing the goddess Irene out of the well, the chorus exclaims, v. 496. ὦς κακὸν εἴ τινες εἰσὶν ἐν ἡμῖν. Mr. B.'s MS. had ὦς κακὸν οἷ τινες εἰσὶν ἐν ἡμῖν. of which, he says, he could make nothing for a long time, till he luckily found the true reading in Suidas, v. κακόνοι'

* [Junta has, ἡμῖν σχολῆ. R, P.]

Ὡς κακόνους τινές εἰσιν ἐν ἡμῖν. "There are certainly some disaffected people among us." And so the scholiast seems to have read in his copy, as one may conjecture from his explanation.

In the Equites, v. 1300, etc. the triremes are in great agitation, upon hearing that Hyperbolus is going to petition for a fleet, and they vow that he shall never command them. But, says one, who had never come near man, "if the Athenians consent to this motion,"—

καθῆσθαι μοι δοκῶ

Εἰς τὸ Θησεῖον πλεούσαις, ἢ πὶ τῶν σεμνῶν θεῶν.

In which words there is neither sense nor syntax.

Whoever has a mind to see what the critics have written about it and about it, may consult Petit (Leg. Attic. p. 79.), * D'orville and Salvini (Miscell. Observat. Vol. III. p. 401. 2.), Dawes (Misc. Crit. p. 252.): Mr. Brunck has restored from conjecture, δοκεῖ—πλεούσας, referring to Vesp. 270. "I advise that we sail either to the Theseum, or the temple of the Eumenides, and take refuge there." The emendation is ingenious and certain, nor does it the less honour to Mr. Brunck's sagacity, that Reiske had already proposed the same in the Acta Lipsiensia for July 1750, p. 419.

Eumenides,

Eq. 751. Οὐκ ἂν καθιζοίμην ἐν ἄλλῳ χωρίῳ.
Ἄλλ' εἰς τὸ πρόσθε χρῆν παρῆναι εἰς τὴν Πνύκα.

This Demus says to Agoracritus, who had requested him not to hear the cause in Pnyx. The commentators have been led into gross errors by a slight corruption in the text. Mr. B. has elegantly restored, ὡς τὸ πρόσθε, "as formerly."

Nub. 339. Κεστράν τεμάχη μεγάλην ἀγαθῶν, κρέα τ' ὀρνίθια κιχλᾶν. The metre is defective by half a foot. In Kuster's edition: κρέα τ' ὀρνίθειά γε κιχλᾶν. Mr. Brunck has thrown out γε, and replaced the true reading upon the authority of Athenæus and Eustathius, κιχλᾶν. It doubtless escaped his notice, that H. Stephens had made this emendation in his Ap. to Greek Thes. p. 1228. To the authorities mentioned, he might have added the testimony of the Etymologus M. whom Phavorinus has transcribed p. 1060. ed. Basil. 1541.

Having

Having quoted at random these few instances, in which the text of the author is improved; I now pass to the invidious and unpleasant task of marking some of those places, where the learned editor has either made the text worse, or left it faulty. One great defect I cannot help remarking in Mr. B. which is, his being in general too sparing of his explanations. As he has* omitted to publish the scholia together with the text, he ought to have made some amends for this defect in his notes, and also to have been more curious in noting the parodies of the tragedians and other authors in which Aristophanes so much indulges himself. These will appear to some grave omissions—but the oversights I am going to mention, Mr. B. would, without question, have entirely supplied or corrected, if he had allowed himself a little leisure for another revisal.

He has publicly testified that he has a great dislike to the particle $\gamma\epsilon$, and accordingly

* [“As he has most unaccountably, and to the full success of his work fatally, omitted”—The words printed in Italics were inserted by Mr. MARY.]

has,

has, with great justice, frequently expunged it; but he should have done it much oftener, and I will give a few examples where it ought to be thrown out, as perfectly useless both to the metre and sense.

Nub. 869. Καὶ τῶν κρεμαθρῶν ἔ τριζων τῶν ἐνθάδε. Mr. B. inserts γε here after τῶν, to make the verse agree with Dawes's canon. I had rather read κρεμαστρῶν on the authority of Pollux X. 157. and so perhaps the scholiast read, v. Pierson on Mæris, p. 242.—1216. Ἀπερυσθριάσαι γε μᾶλλον, ἢ σχεῖν πράγματα. As the penultima of ἀπερυσθριάσαι is long, the γε ought to be expunged.—Ran. 1055. Ἔστι διδάσκαλος, ὅστις φράζει τοῖς δ' ἡβῶσιν γε ποιηταί. The particle is interpolated by some later editor. Read τοῖσιν δ' ἡβῶσι.—Equit. 508. Ἠνάγκαζεν ἔπη λέξοντάς γ' ἐς τὸ Δίατρον παραβῆναι. Read Ἠνάγκαζεν λέξοντας ἔπη πρὸς τὸ Δίατρον, as it is quoted by the author of the argument to the Nubes*. Acharn. 629. Οὐπω παρέβη πρὸς τὸ Δίατρον λέξων. Pac. 735. Αὐτὸν ἐπήνει πρὸς τὸ Δίατρον παράβας. There is another passage in Aristophanes where πρὸς is to be restored instead of εἰς, Acharn. 392. Ὡς σκῆψιν ἂν ἀγὼν ἔτος ἐκ ἐσδέξεται. This Mr. B. quotes in a note upon Nub. 465. (where r. ἐπόψομαι for ὄψομαι from Suidas, v. ἄρα γε) to show that the particle ἂν may be joined with a future indicative, a point I shall not at present dispute, but the validity of this example to prove it. If the learned critic had looked into any of the three first editions of Suidas, v. Σίσυφος, or P. Leopard. Emendat. xiii. 8. he would have found it thus quoted, Ὡς σκῆψιν ἀγὼν ἔτος ἐ προσδέξεται, which is the true reading, changing only ἀγὼν into ἀγών, or, as Mr. Brunck would write it, ἀγών.

Acharn. 18. Οὕτως ἐδήχθη ὑπὸ κοίνας γε τὰς ὀφρῦς. As the penultima of κοίνας may be made long, vid. Lysistr. 470., the γε may be safely ejected on the authority of the scholiast and the first editions of Suidas, v. ῥύπτομαι.

Av. 1478. Τῆτο μὲν γε ἦρος αἰεὶ — Mr. B. is not quite satisfied with this verse, and therefore proposes Τῆτο μὲντ' ἄρ' — The common reading is Τῆτο μὲν ἦρος αἰεὶ — read, Τῆτο τῆ μὲν ἦρος, which answers to what follows, Τῆ δὲ χειμῶνος. —

Eccles. 701. Τοῖς δ' ἐνπρεπίσιν γ' ἀπολαβῆντες.

γε is of the editor's insertion. Read, Τοῖς εὐ-πρεπέσιν δ'.

Thesmoph. 225. Οὐ γὰρ, μὰ τὴν Δήμητρα γ', ἐνταυθοῖ μενῶ. The particle is here of no force, nor is it in the earlier editions, at least it is not in the Basil. 1532. There can scarcely be a doubt, I think, but we must read, Οὐ γὰρ, μὰ τὴν Δήμητρ', ἔτ' ἐνταυθοῖ μενῶ, to any one who will consult Nub. 814. Vesp. 1442.
Av. 1335. I shall quote the middle example, Οὐ τοι, μὰ τὴν Δήμητρ', ἔτ' ἐνταυθοῖ μενεῖς. To show of what signal use it is sometimes to compare an author with himself, I will give another example. Thesmoph. 630. Φέρε' ἴδω, τί πρῶτον ἦν; ἐπίνομεν; Mr. B. has aptly quoted Nub. 787. Φέρε' ἴδω, τί μέντοι πρῶτον ἦν; τί πρῶτον ἦν; but, what is surprising, did not see that the verse in question was to be amended thus:
Φέρε' ἴδω, τί μέντοι πρῶτον ἦν; as it is quoted by Suidas, v. προπίνει.

Ibid. 443. Ὀλίγων ἕνεκα γ' αὐτὴ παρῆλθον ῥημάτων. Why does Mr. B. follow that bardus, stipes, fungus, etc. Bergler with his γε? Why • not ἕνεκα καὐτῆ—Lysistr. 82. Γυμνάδομαί γε κὲ ποτὶ πυγὰν ἄλλομαι. Mr. B. reads γα La-conice.

conice. I should prefer Γυμνάδομαι τε—as it is quoted by Eustathius, p. 1570.

Mr. B. sometimes quits the editions, at least those which I have, to wit, Aldus, Basil. 1532, and Kuster, without giving his reader notice, as for instance, Nub. 826. 1302. Ran. 320. 376. 1406. Probably he does this on the authority of MSS. (perhaps of other edd.); but such variations ought to be accounted for in the notes.

He sometimes erroneously follows Kuster's edition; as e. g. Plut. 197. Ἡ φησιν οὐ βιωτὸν αὐτῷ τὸν βίον. In the preceding editions it is thus; Ἡ φησιν, ἐκ εἶναι βιωτὸν αὐτῷ τὸν βίον, where αὐτῷ, not εἶναι, ought to have been omitted.

Nub. 1329. ἴσθ' for οἴσθ', from Kuster.

Eq. 787. Τῆτό γε τῆργον ἀληθῶς ἔστιν.—In Aldus, Τῆτό γέ σου τῆργον ἀληθῶς—read, Τῆτό γε τοί σὺ τῆργον ἀληθῶς—vide infra 1054.*

Mr. Brunck generally shows a great respect for Dawes, and follows his emendations; but I think he sometimes rejects them without reason, and sometimes does not give them all the support they might have; e. g. the emendation

emendation on Acharn. 271, is confirmed by Suidas, v. Δαμάχων. that on Pac. 188. by Suidas, v. μιαροί. Of the first I shall give but one instance; Plut. 392. as a MS. has ποῖον, it ought to have been inserted in the text. The assertion of Mr. B's, that there are a hundred exceptions, is rash; I do not believe there are six. I remember one in the Rhesus, but easily to be altered. The verse from the Phœnissæ is no proof at all; that from the Bacchæ very little; in the example from the Acharn. 903. read 'Ο ποῖος ἔτος Δάμαχος.—vid. Nub. 1270. Τὰ ποῖα ταῦτα χρέμαθ'; so far from 'Ο ποῖος not being admissible here, it is almost necessary, on account of the apodosis, 'Ο δεινός*.—I will give two instances of Aristophanes's exactness in this particular: Ran. 1200. Ἀπὸ ληκυθίας τὰς σὺς προλόγους διαφθερῶ. So a MS. has it; rightly, as appears from the next verse, Ἀπὸ ληκυθίας σὺ τὰς ἐμέας; —Aves 1419. Ὅδὶ πάρεστιν ἀλλ' ὅττι χρῆ, δεῖ λέγειν. Πτερῶν, πτερῶν δεῖ. It is plain, that in the first verse we must read ὅττι δεῖ, χρῆ λέγειν, [* Conf. R. P. ad Ph. 892. 1718. I am grieved that the former line had been attempted by Ruhnkenius ad Rut. Lup. p. 54.]

not only for the reason above given, but also because χρῆ never governs a genitive case in the Attic poets. The only example, I believe, that can be produced to the contrary, is Euripides Orest. 667 (659.). τί χρῆ φίλων; but that is to be altered into δεῖ φίλων on the authority of Plutarch. Op. Mor. p. 68. E. Aristotel. Ethic. ix. 9.*

Eq. 400. γενοίμην ἐν Κρατίου κώδιον. I much question whether this can signify una de pelibus Cratini. L. Bos's emendation ἐν Κρατίου (Animadv. p. 3.) seems to me to admit of no doubt.

Ib. 456. Mr. B. seems somewhat uncertain about the word κολᾶ. There is no reason for change. The Attics only use the middle future of this verb. κολωμένους ought to have been restored, Vesp. 244, instead of κολουμένους, which cannot possibly come from κολούω, or indeed any other word. Theopompus apud

Suidam, v. Ἄττις. Κολάσομαί γε σὲ, Καὶ τὸν σὸν Ἄττιν*.

Thesm. 149. Χρὴ τὸν ποιητὴν ἄνδρα πρὸς τὰ δράματα—when ἀνὴρ is joined with a substantive, it is not, I believe, capable of the article. The τὸν is, I believe, the insertion of a later editor, without any authority; I would therefore read, Χρὴ γὰρ ποιητὴν—which connects better with the preceding verses.

In so long a work, it is impossible but some little inaccuracies, respecting the niceties of metre, must escape an editor, however diligent or sagacious.

Eq. 569. Κούδεις οὐδεπώποτ' αὐτῶν—It is astonishing that Mr. Brunck should let the spondee pass in the first place, and not alter it to Κούτεις.

Ibid. 1256. Ὅπως γένωμαί σοι Φανὸς ὑπογραφὸς δικῶν. The metre of this line is redundant (the first syllable of Φανὸς being long), though Valesius (on Harpocraton, p. 228.) and D'Orville (on Chariton, p. 5.) quote it without suspicion. Amend it from Suidas, v. Φανός:

Ὅπως ἴσομαί σοι.

Ρac. 185. Τί σοί ποτ' ἐστὶ τοῦνομ', οὐκ ἐρεῖς; μικρώτατος. An iambic with seven feet. Correct it, Τί σοί ποτ' ἴστ' ὄνομ', οὐκ ἐρεῖς; as Suidas quotes it v. μιαιοί. I will take this occasion to observe, that a little above, instead of ὦ μισρὲ καὶ πολμηρὲ, —we must read on the same authority, ὦ βδελυρὲ, to avoid tautology. Compare Ran. 465, 466.

Av. 385. Ἄλλα μὴν οὐδ' ἄλλο σοί πο πρᾶγμ' ἠναντιώμεθα. A spondee in the fifth place. The first editions have ἐναντιώμεθα; read ἐνηντιώμεθα.

Thesm. 234. Βούλει θεάσασθαι σαυτόν; εἰ δοκεῖ, φέρε. A syllable too much; correct it slightly, Βούλει θεᾶσθαι.—Eccles. 369. Lysistr. 742. ὦ πότνια Εἰλείθυια —without an elision; that the first syllable in πότνια may not be made long contrary to the author's custom. Τὸ Φάρμαχόν σου τὴν νόσον μείζω ποιεῖ*. If any thing is to be altered, I should rather suppose, 'Ἄλλ' ought to be supplied at the beginning of the verse. A similar omission has happened in the Aldine edition of Euripid. Phœniss. 1806 (1775), and in many editions of our author, Av. 1693. Ἄλλὰ γαμικὴν χλανίδα δότω τις δεῦρό μοι. (ita leg. ex Schol. in v. 1565.) †

The Index is a repetition of Kuster's, but very much improved and enlarged. The Latin interpretation, which the learned editor has altered and corrected in an infinity of places, is, as far as I have consulted it, perspicuous and accurate. In the Fragments, perhaps, something more might have been done. But as I have not now either leisure or inclination to undertake a minute examination; I shall only just observe, that in the Gerytades, part of the twenty-first fragment is repeated in the Incerta, No. 41. where instead of ῥήματα—ἐμβαπτόμενος, we must read ῥῆμα τι—ἐμβαπτόμενον ‡ from Athenæus,

quam hypotheticam appellare possumus. In this publication, Mr. W. professes to deal only in the hypothetical sort of criticism; and further observes, “plus in bonâ (conjecturâ) laudis, quam in malâ vituperationis, esse.” Whether he will have any cause to avail himself of this plea, my readers may determine for themselves, from the specimens I shall hereafter produce. It must be owned, even by those who disapprove of his conjectures, that they are often supported with learning and ingenuity, and they who are dissatisfied with his criticisms cannot complain of his want of civility, that great opprobrium of the sect. But, generally speaking, there is not that felicity in his emendations, which instantly compels the reader's assent, and supersedes the necessity of a long defence, or explanation. Mr. W. is somewhat unlucky in setting out with a fragment of Hermesianax, (Athenæi p. 597) which has come down to us in so wretched a state, that, after the labours of the best critics, Casaubon, Heringa, Ruhnkenius, etc. it still abounds with corruptions. It is not, therefore, therefore, to be wondered at, if Mr. W. has done but little towards restoring this fragment to its first integrity. His best conjecture is, I think, that on v. 83. I shall, therefore, transcribe the lines. After enumerating the most famous poets that were lovers, Hermesianax proceeds to shew, that even philosophers, in spite of their gravity, were "the sons of women." Οὐδὲ μὲν οὐδ' ὅποσοι σκληρὸν βίον ἰστήσαντο, Ἀνθρώπων, σκολιὴν μαϊόμενοι σοφίην, Οὐδ' οἱ δεινὸν ἔρωτος ἀπειτρέψαντο κυδοιμὸν Φαινόμενον, δεινὸν δ' ἦλθον ὑφ' ἠνίοχον. For Οὐδ' οἱ δεινὸν, to avoid the repetition of the same word, Mr. W. reads, Οὐδ' οἷδ' αἰνὸν. This seems perfectly right (though not having either Lennep or Ruhnkenius at hand, I am not certain whether this conjecture has been anticipated or not); but in the verses immediately following, Mr. W. is less happy. I shall quote the passage, and, for particular reasons, subjoin a Latin commentary. Οἷη μὲν Σάμιον μανίη κατέδησε Θεανοῦς Πυθαγόρην, ἑλίπων κομψὰ γεωμετρίας Εὐγράμενον* καὶ κύπλον ὅσον περιβάλλεται αἰθῆρ, Βαιῆ τ' ἐν σφαίρῃ πάντ'

In Simonides's epigram, (ap. Athen. p. 125.)
 Mr. W. p. 14. adopts Brunck's emendation* of ἰκρύφθη for ἰκάμφθη. A large part of the book (to p. 72) is, as the title-page seems to promise, employed about the fragments of the poets quoted by Athenæus. The rest is taken up with Apollonius Rhodius, Aristæ-netus, Aristophanes, Asclepiades, Babrius, Euripides, Longus, Orpheus, Plutarch, Sophocles, Theocritus, Xenophon, etc. I shall produce some examples of Mr. W's conjectures, as they occur in order.

P. 40. In the epigram of Hedylus, (ap.
 Athen. p. 486.) it is strange Mr. W. should mistake the sense, when he had Pierson's note on Mæris (p. 413.) before him. The cause, however, seems to be the expression Δίσκιον μετροῦσα, or the σχῆμα πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμινον, as the grammarians call it. That the reader may judge, I will subjoin the middle distich in the original, with a literal interpretation in English, and Mr. W's Latin version ; Ἦς τόδε σοι, Παφίη, ζῶρον μετροῦσα θυῶεν*, Κεῖται πορφύρης Δίσειον ἰξ ὑέλου. By whom the cup of purple glass, which measured the fragrant wine, is dedicated to thee, O Venus. Mr. W reads, Ἦστο δὲ οἱ Παφίη—, Χεῖται, et ἰξ ὑέλου.

* [An. Gr. l. 146. cv.]

Adstitit huic Paphia halantes emensa culullos, et capiunt Lesbi pocula sex calices. Ex Græcis malis Latina fecit non bona. This error is the more extraordinary, as Pierson had l. c.
 quoted two epigrams, one of the same Hedylus, where the same expression Ἦς κεῖται occurs. With equal success Mr. W. p. 53.
 has attacked a fragment of Plato, the comic poet, which stands thus, in the editions of Athenæus, p. 677. Καίτοι φορεῖτε γλώτταν ἐν ὑποδήμασιν, Στεφάνους δ' ὑπὸ γλώττησιν, ὃ τε πίνητέ
 που. As this passage is produced to prove the use of a chaplet called hyroglossis, it is clear that ὑπὸ γλώττησιν must be joined in one word.
 In the former line Mr. W. reads γλώσσας, which spoils the metre, without improving the

sense. In the second, Στεφάνους δ' ὑπογλωττίδας ὅτι πίνητί που. This line too is defective in its metre, which, however, is easily amended, by correcting, as the syntax requires, ὅταν π. As to the other emendation, though, perhaps, examples of a similar pleonasm might be adduced, they ought very sparingly to be obtruded on authors from conjecture: besides, a smaller alteration will be sufficient if we read Στεφανοῦσθ' ὑπογλωττίσιν ὅταν π. Coronis ex hypoglossâ factis coronati potatis. When the word was once, by the carelessness of transcribers, separated, thus Στεφάνους θ' ὑ, it was easy to make the other mistake. P. 72. Mr. Weston favours us with two conjectures upon Apollonius Rh. I. 368. and 672. in the former ἰνδυτὸν for ἰνδοθεν, and in the latter πλακτῆσιν for λευκῆσιν.

P. 110. Mr. W. gives us an inscription from Wheeler, p. 77. Η ΓΕΡΟΥΣΙΑ ΚΥΡΟΝ ΑΠΟΛΛΩΝΙΟΥ ΑΡΧΙΑΤΡΟΝ ΑΡΙΣΤΟΝ ΠΟΛΕΙ [πόλιν] ΤΗΝ ΕΠΙΣΗΜΟΝ ΠΡΟΣ ΠΟΛΛΟΙΣ ΕΥΕΡΓΕΤΗΜΑΣΙΝ ΕΙΣ ΑΥΤΗΝ ΑΛΕΙΨΑΝΤΑ ΛΑΜΠΡΩΣ ΚΑΙ ΠΟΛΥΔΑΠΑΝΩΣ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΥΓΚΡΙΤΩΣ. Mr. W. explains

explains ἀλίψαντα, qui urbem dealbasset et calce splendida et pretiosa citra comparationem ædificia obduxisset. I shall further observe, that if the πόλις, which is inserted in brackets, is meant for an emendation, nothing can be more erroneous, as it is plain that ΠΟΛΕΙ ΤΗΝ ought to coalesce into one word, ΠΟΛΕΙΤΗΝ, εἰ and ι being perpetually confounded in MSS. and inscriptions.

P. 114. Mr. W. presents us with an elegant conjecture (if it did not recede rather too far from the vulgar reading) upon a corrupt and mutilated passage in the author, de Lapidibus, of whom Mr. Tyrwhitt has lately given us so excellent an edition; v. 38.—καὶ πόντοιο κυκωμένου οὐκ ἀλεγίζων Βήσσετ' ἐπὶ τραφερῆν ἀκυμάντοισι πέδοισσι. Mr. W. reads Βήσσεθ' ΥΠΗΝ ἐπ' ΑΤΑΡΠΙΟΝ ἀκ. and quotes Apollon. Rhod. l. 182. seq.

P. 121. In the following passage of Theocritus, Μή μοι γὰρ Πέλοπος, μή μοι χρύσεια τάλαντα Εἴη ἔχειν, μηδὲ πρόσθε Δέειν ἀνέμων. Mr. W. proposes, as a conjecture, ΧΡΥΣΕΙ' ΑΤΑΛΑΝΤΗΣ* Εἴη, &c. which Reiske had anticipated, and inserted in his edition; as Mr. W. finds out in his Index v. Reiske. He or Reiske ought to have produced some example of the ellipsis of μήλα, not to mention that the second line is almost tautology, if we admit this emendation: if I thought the verse stood in need of any alteration, I should infinitely prefer Pierson's, ΚΡΟΙΣΟΙΟ τάλαντα, especially as this conjecture gained the approbation of Jortin (præf. to Fawkes's translation). But the vulgar reading is perfectly right, unless we suppose Euripides to have been a less accurate poet than Theocritus. Med. ap. Grot. Excerpt. p. 197 (542). Εἶη, δ' ἔμοιγε μήτε χρυσὸς ἐν δόμοις, Μήτ' Ὀρφέως κάλλιον ὑμνήσαι μέλος, Εἰ μὴ πῖσημος ἢ τύχη γένοιτό μοι. *Herc. The happiest conjecture, I think, in the book, with which I shall, therefore, conclude this account, is upon

upon Xenophon, Sympos. I. 8. Αυτόλυκος μὲν οὖν παρὰ τὸν πατέρα ἐκαθίζετο, οἱ δ' ἄλλοι, ὥσπερ εἰκὸς, κατεκλίσθησαν. Mr. W. reads, with great probability, ὥσπερ εἶχον, comparing Xenophon Hist. Gr. IV. p. 511. ed. 1625. ὁ δὲ Φαρνάβαζος ἦκεν ἔχων στολὴν πολλοῦ ἀξίαν—κατεκλίθη οὖν καὶ αὐτός, ὥσπερ εἶχε, χαμαί, and Aristophanes Eccles. 529.

As the author professes, in his title page, to have turned some of the Greek into Latin verse, I should produce a specimen of his performance in that way; but, to speak ingenuously, I think he has been impolitic in choosing such difficult and unpromising originals. Without doubt, the fault is in the materials, not in the artificer. To translate Hermesianax, or Hedylus, to any purpose, he should have first been sure of their sense. Even the great Grotius himself, when he translated the scattered fragments of Greek poets, committed a multitude of the grossest mistakes. But had Grotius succeeded ever so well, that success could give no inferior critic or poet a reasonable pretext to follow his example.

For my own part, without presuming to usurp the office of a moderator in this dispute, I shall, with Mr. H's good leave, make a few short remarks on one or two assertions, which, I confess, he seems to me to have thrown out at random, and not to have considered with a due degree of attention and accuracy. He will view what I shall offer in the light of a friendly, even if mistaken, attempt to set him right; an attempt not altogether needless, because the higher we rate an author's abilities, the readier we are to receive and propagate his errors.

1. One of the arguments, on the strength of which Mr. H. (p. 54.) suspects Homer's right to the hymn to Ceres, is a little extraordinary; "because, instead of εἶπε (Hymn 479.) Pausanias (Corinth. 14.) quotes δείξει." Etymologists know, that the Latin word dico is literally from the Greek δείκω, the root of δείκνυμι; and Mr. H. knows, that Cæsar often uses demonstravimus very nearly in the same sense with diximus.—Therefore, the only legitimate conclusion was, that Pausanias has preserved the genuine and more poetical word, instead of the gloss or explanation. So in Sophocles Philoct. 426. instead of the common reading, Οἴμοι δὲ αὐτῶς δεινὸν ἔλεξας, Mr. Brunck will probably give us in the text of his new edition, the variation which

δειξας*.

2. (p. 125.) "The mere ipse dixit of the pedantic Dawes must give place to two poetical authorities." The first is Θεουκυδίδην Ολόρου Κερκοπίδην τὸ γένος†. In what licenses three epigrammatists, who wrote long after the purity and perfection of the Greek poetry were entirely lost, may indulge themselves, is of no consequence; and as for Thomas Scholasticus, his taste may be guessed from his joining Thucydides and Demosthenes in the same encomium with Aristides, a decision almost as judicious as

would

would be that critic's who should rank Valckenaer and Dawes in the same class with Barnes and Pauw (vid. Apology, p. 5.). If Mr. H. believes that every license, which the later epigrammatists take, may be allowed in a modern poet, he will find it difficult to commit any errors in quantity, as there is scarcely a violation of metre which may not be defended by the example of one or other of these poetasters*. When an imitator of the ancients unites in his own compositions all the different dialects and metres, which the Greek language admitted through the space

* A young poet the other day shewed me some Latin Asclepiads, one of which concluded with the word frater. I objected to it as being a false quantity; but he soon convinced me, that "my pedantic ipse dixit must give place to poetical authority," by producing the following epigram of Palladas (Anthol. H. St. i. 42. p. 63. = Brunck, ii. p. 413.), in which a just taste, refined wit, and a scrupulous regard to the exactness and graces of versification, are equally conspicuous.

of a thousand years, it is not easy to decide what system of prosody or style he may have formed for his own use. What would Mr. H. think of a foreigner, who, by way of writing English monostrophics, should studiously collect and mingle the phraseology, diction, and prosody of Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton, and Pope, et tum mirifice speraret se esse locutum? In my judgement, therefore, Dawes's observation has not been materially hurt by what Mr. H. has advanced.—Dawes does not say that there is no example to be found of the license that Mr. H. defends, but that whoever takes such a license is ignorant of quantity; as ignorant, I may add, as he would be, who should make ἱπαραι (New Monostr. p. 20.) an anapæst, γυπων (p. 30.) or ψυχος (p. 36.) an iambus, or εἰ συ (p. 38.) a spondee. Part of Mr. H's civility to Dawes has been already quoted. The paragraph concludes with saying, that "he is positive, hasty and wrong in more passages than in one." Without entering on a long defence of Dawes, I shall venture to urge one plea in his favour. He wrote in his youth some Greek

Greek verses, full of mistake in syntax and dialect, though faultless, I believe, in point of metre. But afterwards, becoming sensible of his error, he quitted what he esteemed so idle and unprofitable a study, and chose rather to read good Greek than to write bad. An example of candour and prudence well worthy to be imitated!

THE LEARNED PIG.

THIS gentleman professing himself to be extremely learned, will have no objection to find his merits set forth in a Greek quotation :

Πρὸς ὃδ' εἰσιδέειν καὶ μείλιχος, οὐδέ τι χοίροις

Ἄλλοισι προσέοικε νόος δέ οἱ ἦντε φωνὸς

which, no manner of doubt, he will immediately translate for the amusement of the dilettanti who visit him.

The well-earned admiration this pig meets with from a sensible and discerning public,

* As it is possible that the pig's Greek may want rubbing up, owing to his having kept so much company with ladies, the chien savant has kindly communicated a translation. This, though not very elegant, and probably made from the Latin, as it does honour to the ingenuous beast, and shews that he is above any sentiment of envy on this occasion, I shall insert.

A gentle pig this same, a pig of parts,
And learn'd as F.R.S. or graduate in arts;
His ancestors, 'tis true, could only squeak,
But this has been at school—and in a month will speak.
puts

puts me in mind of a pleasant story told by Lucian, at the beginning of the first Prometheus*. One of the Ptolemies was, it seems, very desirous of gratifying the Egyptians with the sight of something new: for this purpose he introduced into the public games he was exhibiting a black camel from Bactria splendidly caparisoned, and a man half black and half white; but far from giving the monsters the applause they deserved, the Egyptians, who, as our sneering author says, were a people, who did not like things because they were new and uncommon, but rather delighted in fitness and propriety, were frightened at the camel and fairly hissed the man. The consequence of this uncourteous reception was, that the camel (who was a camel of spirit, and very worthy to wear a bridle from the stable of Cambyses, as we are told she did) died of grief. The man's fate was, if possible, harder; for he was given to an opera singer, who had sung well at a great supper, at which Theocritus and the members of the tragic and comic Pleiades were present.

ART.

ART. IX. The Parian Chronicle.

DICENDUM est mihi ad ea quæ a te dicta sunt, sed ita, nihil ut affirmem; quæram omnia, dubitans plerumque, et mihi ipse diffidens.

Having already given a concise account* of this learned and ingenious work, we shall briefly state such doubts as have arisen in our minds, on reviewing Mr. Robertson's arguments; and submit them to his impartial consideration. If we before omitted any observation of moment, from a desire of contracting our article into as small a compass as possible, we shall now endeavour to compensate for the neglect.

Objection I. The characters have no certain or unequivocal marks of antiquity. This seems rather to be an answer to a defender of the inscription, than an objection. If a zealous partisan of the marble should appeal to its characters and orthography, as decisive proofs of its being genuine, it would be proper enough to answer, that these circumstances afford no certain criterion of authenticity. But in this word certain sculks an unlucky ambiguity. If it means demonstrative, it must be allowed that no inscription can be proved to be certainly genuine, from these appearances; but if it means no more than highly probable, many inscriptions possess sufficient internal evidence to give their claims this degree of certainty. The true question is, Has not the Parian Chronicle every mark of antiquity that can be expected in a monument claiming the age of 2000 years? The letters Γ and Ξ are, by Mr. R's own confession, such as occur in genuine inscriptions; and to say in answer, that an impostor might copy the forms of these letters from other inscriptions, is already to suppose the inscription forged, before it is rendered probable by argument. The learned author of the Dissertation seems to betray some doubt of his own conclusion; for he adds, p. 56, 'that the antiquity of an inscription can

can never be proved by the mere form of the letters, because the most ancient characters are as easily counterfeited as the modern. But this objection is equally applicable to all other ancient inscriptions, and is not to the purpose, if the present inscription has any peculiar marks of imposture in its characters and orthography. 'The characters do not resemble the Sigeian, the Nemean, or the Delian inscriptions.' Mr. R. answers this objection himself by adding, 'which are supposed to be of a more ancient date.' The opposite reason to this will be a sufficient answer to the other objection, 'that they do not resemble the Farnesian pillars or the Alexandrian MS.' If 'they differ in many respects from the Marmor Sandvicense,' they may be presumed to agree in many. 'They seem to resemble, more than any other, the alphabet taken by Montfaucon from the Marmor Cyzicenum.' Thus it appears that the Parian Chronicle most nearly resembles the two inscriptions, to whose age it most nearly approaches.

When

When Mr. R. adds, that the letters ‘are such as an ordinary stone-cutter would probably make, if he were employed to engrave a Greek inscription, according to the alphabet now in use,’ he must be understood cum grano salis. The engraver of a fac-simile generally omits some nice and minute touches in taking his copy; but, even with this abatement, we dare appeal to any adept in Greek calligraphy whether the specimen facing p. 56, will justify our author’s observation. ‘The small letters (ο, ϑ, ω), intermixed among the larger, have an air of affectation and artifice.’ Then has the greater part of ancient inscriptions an air of affectation and artifice. For the ο is perpetually engraved in this diminutive size, and ω being of a kindred sound, and ϑ of a kindred shape, how can we wonder that all three should be represented of the same magnitude? In the inscription, which immediately follows the marble in Dr. Chandler’s edition, No. xxiv. these very three letters are never so large as the rest, and often much smaller; of which there

there are instances in the three first lines. See also two medals in the second part of Dorville's Sicula, tab. xvi. num. 7. 9.

‘From the archaisms, such as, ἐγ Λυκωργίας, ἐγ Κυβέλλοις, ἐμ Πάρῳι, etc. etc. no conclusion can be drawn in favour of the authenticity of the inscription.’ Yet surely every thing common to it, with other inscriptions confessedly genuine, creates a reasonable presumption in its favour. ‘But what reason could there be for these archaisms in the Parian Chronicle? We do not usually find them in Greek writers of the same age, or even of a more early date.’ The reason is, according to our opinion, that such archaisms were then in use: this we know from other inscriptions, in which such archaisms (or, as our author afterward calls them, barbarisms.) are frequent. Nothing can be inferred from the Greek writers, unless we had their autographs. The present system of orthography in our printed Greek books is out of the question. Again, ‘The inscription sometimes adopts and sometimes neglects these archaisms, as in lines 4. 12. 27. 52. 63. 67.’

This

This inconsistency either is no valid objection, or, if it be valid, will demolish not only almost every other inscription, but almost every writing whatsoever. For example, in the inscription just quoted, No. xxiv. we find τὸΝ βασιλία l. 20. and ὄταΜ πίμπηι, 24. A little farther, No. xxvi. l. 31. we have ἰΓ Μαγνησίας, 57. 73. 81. ἰΚ Μαγνησίας, and 106. 108. ἰΚΓ Μαγνησίας. The Corcyrean inscription (Montfaucon, Diar. Ital. p. 420.) promiscuously uses ἰΚδανίζομαι and ἰΓδανίζομαι. In English, who is surprised to find has and hath, a hand and an hand, a useful and an useful, in the works of the same author? We could produce instances of this inaccuracy from the same page, nay from the same sentence.

‘The authenticity of those inscriptions, in which these archaisms appear, must be established, before they can be produced in opposition to the present argument.’ This is, we cannot help thinking, rather too severe a restriction. If no inscription may be quoted, before it be proved genuine, the learned author of the Dissertation need not be afraid of being being confuted, for nobody will engage with him on such conditions. Perhaps the reverse of the rule will be thought more equitable: that every inscription be allowed to be genuine, till its authenticity be rendered doubtful by probable arguments. We will conclude this head with two short observations. In Selden's copy, l. 26. was written ΠΟΗΣΙΝ, which the later editors have altered to ΠΟΛΗΣΙΝ, but without reason, the other being the more ancient way of writing, common in MSS. and sometimes found on inscriptions. (See G. Koen's Notes on Gregorius de Dialectis, p. 30*.) In l. 83. the Marble has Καλλίου, for which Palmer wished to substitute Καλλίου. Dr. Taylor refutes him from the Marmor Sandvicense, observing at the same time, that this orthography occurs in no other place whatever, except in these two monuments. Is it likely that two engravers should by chance coincide in the same mistake, or that the forger of the Parian Chronicle (if it be forged) should have seen the Marmor Sand-

* [See Bastius ad l. c. et Photii Lex.]

vicense, and taken notice of this peculiarity with the intention of afterward employing it in the fabrication of an imposture?

We will now consider, more briefly, the other objections.

II. 'It is not probable that the Chronicle was engraved for private use. 1. Because it was such an expense, as few learned Greeks were able to afford.' If only a few were able to afford it, some one of those few might be willing to incur it. But let Mr. R. consider how likely it is that a modern, and probably a needy, Greek should be more able to afford it in the last century, than a learned Greek 2000 years ago! 2. 'A manuscript is more readily circulated.' Do men never prefer cumbrous splendour to cheapness and convenience? And if this composition, instead of being engraved on marble, had been committed to parchment, would it have had a better chance of coming down to the present age? Such a flying sheet would soon be lost; or, if a copy had, by miracle, been preserved to us, the objections to its being genuine nuine would be more plausible than any that have been urged against the inscription. What Mr. R. says about the errors to which an inscription is liable, etc. will only prove that chronological inscriptions ought not to be engraved ; but not that they never were. We allow that the common method of writing in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus was NOT ON STONES. But it was common enough to occur to the mind of any person who wished to leave behind him a memorial at once of his learning and magnificence.

III. This objection, that the marble does not appear to be engraved by public authority, we shall readily admit, though Bentley (Diss. on Phalaris, p. 251.) leans to the contrary opinion. In explaining this objection, the learned dissertator observes, that though the expression, ἀρχοντος ἐμ Πάροι, would lead us to suppose that the inscription related to Paros, not a single circumstance in the history of that island is mentioned. But this expression only shews that the author was an inhabitant of Paros, and intended to give his readers a clue, or ΠΑΡΑΠΕΓΜΑ, by the aid of which they might adjust the general chronology of Greece to the dates of their own history. 'It is as absurd as would be a marble in Jamaica containing the revolutions of England.' We see no absurdity in supposing a book to be written in Jamaica, containing the revolutions of England. The natives of Paros were not uninterested in events relating to the general history of Greece, particularly of Athens; and how can we tell whether the author were an inquilinus or a native of the island; whether he thought it a place beneath his care, or whether he had devoted a separate inscription to the chronology of Paros?

IV. It has been frequently observed, that the earlier periods of the Grecian history are involved in darkness and confusion. Granted.

It follows then, that an author, who should attempt to settle the dates of the earlier periods, would frequently contradict preceding, and be contradicted by subsequent, writers: that he would naturally fall into mistakes, and at best could only hope to adopt the most probable system. But the difficulty of the task, task, or the impossibility of success, are not sufficient to prove that no man has been rash or mad enough to make the attempt. On the contrary, we know that many have made it. What a number of discordant opinions has Mr. R. himself given us from the ancients concerning the age of Homer! This consideration will in part obviate another objection, that the Parian Chronicle does not agree with any ancient author. For, if the ancients contradict one another, how could it follow more than one of them? and why might not the author, without any imputation of ignorance or rashness, sometimes depart from them all? If indeed he disagrees with them when they are unanimous, it might furnish matter for suspicion; though even this would be far from a decisive argument, unless the ancients were so extremely unlike the moderns, as never to be fond of singular and paradoxical positions.

V. This Chronicle is not once mentioned by any writer of antiquity. How many of those inscriptions, which are preserved to the present day, are mentioned by classical authors?

thors? Verrius Flaccus composed a Roman calendar, which, as a monument of his learning and industry, was engraved on marble, and fixed in the most public part of Preneste. Fragments of this very calendar were lately dug up at Preneste, and have been published by a learned Italian*. Now, if the passage of Suetonius†, which informs us of this circumstance, had been lost, would the silence of the Latin writers prove that the fragments were not genuine remains of antiquity? It may be said, that the cases are not parallel, for not a single author mentions the Parian Chronicle, whereas Suetonius does mention Verrius's Roman Calendar. To this we answer, It is dangerous to deny the authenticity of any monument on the slender probability of its being casually mentioned by a single author. We shall also observe, that this fact of the Hemicyclium of Verrius will answer some part of the dissertator's second objection: 'The Parian Chronicle is not an inscription

that might have been concealed in a private library. Why not? It is of no extraordinary bulk; and might formerly have been concealed in a private library, or in a private room, with as much ease as many inscriptions are now concealed in very narrow spaces. But unless this monument were placed in some conspicuous part of the island, and obtruded itself on the notice of every traveller, the wonder will in great measure cease, why it is never quoted by the ancients. Of the nine authors named in p. 109, had any one ever visited Paros? If Pausanias had travelled thither, and published his description of the place, we might perhaps expect to find some mention of this marble in so curious and inquisitive a writer. But though the inscription existed, and were famous at Paros, there seems no necessity for any of the authors, whose works are still extant, to have known or recorded it. If there be, let this learned antagonist point out the place where this mention ought to have been made. If any persons were bound by a stronger obligation than others to speak of the Parian inscription, they they must be the professed chronologers: but alas! we have not the entire works of so much as a single ancient chronologer; it is therefore impossible to determine whether this Chronicle were quoted by any ancient. And supposing it had been seen by some ancient, whose writings still remain, why should he make particular mention of it? Many authors, as we know from their remains, very freely copied their predecessors without naming them. Others, finding only a collection of bare events in the inscription, without historical proofs or reasons, might entirely neglect it, as deserving no credit. Mr. R. seems to lay much stress on the precise, exact, and particular specification of the events, p. 109. But he ought to reflect, that this abrupt and positive method of speaking is not only usual, but necessary, in such short systems of chronology as the marble contains, where events only, and their dates, are set down, unaccompanied by any examination of evidences for and against, without stating any computation of probabilities, or deduction of reasons. When therefore a chronological

gical writer had undertaken to reduce the general history of Greece into a regular and consistent system, admitting that he was acquainted with this inscription, what grounds have we to believe that he would say any thing about it? Either his system coincided with the Chronicle, or not: if it coincided, he would very probably disdain to prop his own opinions with the unsupported assertions of another man, who, as far as he knew, was not better informed than himself. On the other hand, if he differed from the authority of the Marble, he might think it a superfluous exertion of complaisance, to refute, by formal demonstration, a writer who had chosen to give no reasons for his own opinion.—We shall pass hence to objection

VII.—With respect to the parachronisms that Mr. R. produces, we shall without hesitation grant, that the author of the inscription may have committed some mistakes in his chronology, as perhaps concerning Phidon, whom he seems to have confounded with another of the same name, etc. But these mistakes will not conclude against the antiquity quity of the inscription, unless we at the same time reject many of the principal Greek and Roman writers, who have been convicted of similar errors. We return therefore to objection

VI. Some of the facts seem to have been taken from authors of a later date. We have endeavoured impartially to examine and compare the passages quoted in proof of this objection ; but we are obliged to confess, that we do not perceive the faintest traces of theft or imitation. One example only deserves to be excepted, to which we shall therefore pay particular attention.

‘ The names of six, and, if the lacunæ are properly supplied, the names of twelve cities, appear to have been engraved on the Marble, exactly as we find them in Ælian’s Various History. But there is not any imaginable reason for this particular arrangement. It does not correspond with the time of their foundation, with their situation in Ionia, with their relative importance, or with the order in which they are placed by other eminent historians.’

The

The chance of six names, says Mr. R., being placed by two authors in the same order, is as 1 to 720; of twelve, as 1 to 479,001,600. 'It is therefore utterly improbable that these names would have been placed in this order on the Marble, if the author of the inscription had not transcribed them from the historian.'

On this argument we shall observe, 1. That the very contrary conclusion might possibly be just, that the historian transcribed from the inscription. Yet we shall grant that in the present case this is improbable, especially if the author of the Various History be the same Ælian, who, according to Philostratus, Vit. Sophist. II. 31. never quitted Italy in his life. But an intermediate writer might have copied the Marble, and Ælian might have been indebted to him. 2dly, We see no reason to allow that the lacunæ are properly supplied. Suppose we should assert, that the names stood originally thus, Miletus, Ephesus, Erythræ, Clazomenæ, Lebedos, Chios, Phocæa, Colophon, Myus, Priene, Samos, Teos. In this arrangement, only four names

names would be together in the same order with Ælian ; and from these Miletus must be excepted, because there is an obvious reason for mentioning that city first. Three only will then remain, and surely that is too slight a resemblance to be construed into an imitation. For Pausanias and Paterculus, quoted by our author, p. 154, have both enumerated the same twelve cities, and both agree in placing the five last in the same order, nay, the six last, if Vossius's conjecture, that TEUM ought to be inserted in Paterculus* after Myun TEM, be as true as it is plausible. But who imagines that Pausanias had either opportunity or inclination to copy Paterculus? 3dly, Allowing that the names were engraved on the Marble exactly in the order that Ælian has chosen, is there no way of solving the phænomenon, but by supposing that one borrowed from the other? Seven authors at least (Mr. R. seems to say more, p. 154, 5.) mention the colonization of the same cities ; how

many authors now lost may we reasonably conjecture to have done the same? If therefore the composer of the Chronicle, and Ælian, lighted on the same author, the former would probably preserve the same arrangement that he found, because, in transcribing a list of names, he could have no temptation to deviate, and the latter would certainly adhere faithfully to his original, because he is a notorious and servile plagiarist. Mr. R., indeed, thinks, p. 158, that if a succeeding writer had borrowed the words of the inscription, he would not have suppressed the name of the author. This opinion must fall to the ground, if it be shewn that Ælian was accustomed to suppress the names of the authors to whom he was obliged. Ælian has given a list of fourteen celebrated gluttons, and, elsewhere, another of twenty-eight drunkards (from which, by the way, it appears, that people were apt to eat and drink rather too freely in ancient as well as modern times); and both these lists contain exactly the same names in the same order with Atheneüs. Now it is observable, that fourteen names may be

be transposed 87,178,291,200 different ways, and that twenty-eight names admit of 304,888,344,611,713,860,501,504,000,000 different transpositions, etc. etc. Ælian therefore transcribed them from Atheneüs; yet Ælian never mentions Atheneüs in his Various History. So that, whether Ælian copied from the Marble, or only drew from a common source, he might, and very probably would, conceal his authority.

VIII. The history of the discovery of the Marbles is obscure and unsatisfactory.

In p. 169, it is said to be 'related with suspicious circumstances, and without any of those clear and unequivocal evidences which always discriminate truth from falsehood.' The question then is finally decided. If the inscription has not any of those evidences, which truth always possesses, and which falsehood always wants, it is most certainly forged. The learned dissertator seems for a moment to have forgotten the modest character of a DOUBTER, and to personate the dogmatist. But waving this, we shall add, that, as far as we can see, no appearance of fraud fraud is discoverable in any part of the transaction. The history of many inscriptions is related in a manner equally unsatisfactory; and if it could be clearly proved that the Marble was dug up at Paros, what would be easier for a critic, who is determined at any rate to object, than to say, that it was buried there in order to be afterward dug up? If the person, who brought this treasure to light, had been charged on the spot with forging it, or concurring in the forgery, and had then refused to produce the external evidences of its authenticity, we should have a right to question, or perhaps to deny, that it was genuine. But no such objection having been made or hinted, at the original time of its discovery, it is unreasonable to require such testimony, as it is now impossible to obtain. ‘There is nothing said of it in Sir T. Roe’s negotiations.’ What is the inference? That Sir Thomas knew nothing of it, or believed it to be spurious, or forged it, or was privy to the forgery? Surely nothing of this kind can be pretended. But let our author account for the circumstance, if he can. To us it seems

of no consequence on either side. 'Peiresc made no effort to recover this precious relic; and from his composure he seems to have entertained some secret suspicions of its authenticity.' Peiresc would have had no chance of recovering it after it was in the possession of Lord Arundel's agents. He was either a real or a pretended patron of letters, and it became him to affect to be pleased that the inscription had come into England, and was illustrated by his learned friend Selden. John F. Gronovius had with great labour and expense collated Anna Comnena's Alexiades, and intended to publish them. While he was waiting for some other collations, they were intercepted, and the work was published by another. As soon as Gronovius heard this unpleasant news, he answered, that learned men were engaged in a common cause; that if one prevented another in any publication, he ought rather to be thanked for lightening the burthen, than blamed for interfering. But who would conclude from this answer, that Gronovius thought the Alexiades spurious, or not worthy of any regard?

Mr. R.

Mr. R. calculates, that the venders of the Marble received 200 pieces. But here again we are left in the dark, unless we knew the precise value of these pieces. Perhaps they might be equal to an hundred of our pounds, perhaps only to fifty. Beside, as they at first bargained with Samson, Peiresc's supposed Jew-agent, for fifty pieces only, they could not have forged the inscription with the clear prospect of receiving more. Neither does it appear that they were paid by Samson. It is fully as reasonable to suppose fraud on the one side, as on the other; and if Samson, after having the Marble in his possession, refused or delayed to pay the sum stipulated, he might, in consequence of such refusal or delay, be thrown into prison, and might, in revenge, damage the Marble before the owners could recover it.

We own this account of ours to be a romance; but it is lawful to combat romance with romance.

IX. The world has been frequently imposed upon by spurious books and inscriptions, and therefore we should be extremely cautious with

with regard to what we receive under the venerable name of antiquity.

Much truth is observable in this remark. But the danger lies in applying such general apophthegms to particular cases. In the first place, it must be observed, that no forged books will exactly suit Mr. R's purpose, but such as pretend to be the author's own handwriting; nor any inscriptions, but such as are still extant on the original materials, or such as were known to be extant at the time of their pretended discovery. Let the argument be bounded by these limits, and the number of forgeries will be very much reduced. We are not in possession of Cyriacus Anconitanus's book; but if we were governed by authority, we should think that the testimony of Reinesius in his favour greatly overbalances all that Augustinus has said to his prejudice. The opinion of Reinesius is of the more weight, because he suspects Ursinus of publishing counterfeit monuments. We likewise find the most eminent critics of the present age quoting Cyriacus without suspicion. (v. Ruhnken. in Timæi Lex. Plat. p. 10.=15. ed. nov. apud apud Koen, ad Gregor. p. 140.) The doctrine advanced in the citation from Hardouin is exactly conformable to that writer's usual paradoxes. He wanted to destroy the credit of all the Greek and Latin writers. But inscriptions hung like a millstone about the neck of his project. He therefore resolved to make sure work, and to deny the genuineness of as many as he saw convenient; to effect which purpose, he intrenches himself in a general accusation. If the author of the Dissertation had quoted a few more paragraphs from Hardouin, in which he endeavours, after his manner, to shew the forgery of some inscriptions, he would at once have administered the poison and the antidote. But to the reveries of that learned madman, respecting Greek supposititious compositions of this nature, we shall content ourselves with opposing the sentiments of a modern critic, whose judgement on the subject of spurious inscriptions will not be disputed. MAFFEI, in the introduction to the third book, c. 1. p. 51. of his admirable, though unfinished, work, De Arte Criticâ Lapidariâ, uses these words: Inscriptionum Græce loquentium commentitias, si cum Latinis comparemus, deprehendi paucas: neque enim ullum omnino est, in tanta debacchantium falsariorum libidine, monumenti genus, in quod ii sibi minus licere putaverint. Argumento est, paucissimas usque in hanc diem ab eruditis viris, et in hoc literarum genere plurimum versatis rejectas esse, falsique damnatas.

We here finish our exceptions. Much praise is due to the Author of the Dissertation for the learning and candour so conspicuous throughout his work. Even those, who are most prejudiced against his hypothesis, will read his book with pleasure, as well for the taste and erudition displayed in treating the main question, as for the entertaining discussion of incidental matters. If we seem to have assumed more of the style and tone of controversy than suits the impartiality of judges, we plead in excuse, that we intended only to animate, in some degree, a subject, which, to the generality of readers, must appear dry and tedious. If the author should pay any attention to the hints which we have thrown

thrown out, and publish the result of his thoughts on them, we shall coolly reconsider his arguments, *refellere sine iracundia, et refelli sine pertinacia parati.

In the emendations of the 11th and 78th lines of the inscription, the genius of the Greek language requires us to read, Παναθήναια and ἀνέεη, for Παναθηναϊκὸν and ἀνέεης †.

THIS tract on education, attributed to Plutarch, has been several times published by itself, for the use of learners, as we conjecture, rather than for the purpose of displaying the editor's critical talents. The style, though not very elegant, is commonly easy; the maxims are plain and obvious; and the text seems to labour with few signal corruptions*. Whether it be the genuine work of Plutarch,

* When we say this, we rather speak of the state, to which the text might be brought, by a proper use of the helps, which MSS. and criticism would afford, than of the state in which Dr. Edwards has suffered it to remain.

may admit of a doubt. To us, we must own, notwithstanding the praises that have been given to it by respectable writers, it appears much inferior to Plutarch in force of reasoning, in spirit of language, and in the learning of the allusions. Muretus* therefore has suspected it, and M. Wyttenbach† has not scrupled to pronounce it spurious; which we think Dr. Edwards would have done right to mention. The sentiments of such men, whether they can be refuted or not, should never be suppressed.

Dr. Edwards acquaints us, in his preface, that he had meditated an edition of the whole second folio volume, which contains what are commonly called the Moral Works of Plutarch: but being disappointed in his hope of MS. collations, without which nothing worthy of the approbation of the learned could be expected, he desisted from his undertaking. Not to be wholly inactive, however, he published this treatise separately; to which he has added Xylander's version, and such observations of other editors, as he thought most conducive to the illustration of the author. In his own notes, he professes to have had two objects in view: first, to supply the defects of his predecessors; and secondly, to explain and defend the late M. Lennep's system of the tenses.

The first thing that strikes us in the notes, is, that some are in English and some in Latin. This is a practice which we shall never fail to reprehend. When an editor produces any observations, which merit the notice of the learned, (and every editor ought to believe at least as much,) let him converse in the common language of the learned:—but when an author writes on a subject of learning chiefly for the benefit of his countrymen, let him compose wholly in his mother-tongue. Perhaps Dr. Edwards was induced to write his notes in this piebald and patchwork manner, by the example of his father's *Theocritus:—but it is a fault which we neither can nor will excuse in any of the family. Fallit te incautum PIETAS tua *!

Neither can we say that we have no objections to the matter of the notes, from the two opposite circumstances of deficiency, and redundancy. The first care of an editor ought to be to settle the text, so as to preserve a due medium between rashness and timidity. Dr. Edwards is certainly far enough removed from the former of these imputations, but not equally so from the other. He is contented with approving the readings of the MSS. or easy and probable conjectures formed on their traces: but this approbation being placed in the notes, young readers will seldom take the trouble of recurring to it, till they are in utter despair of a remedy from any other quarter. In a book declared to be published for the use of studious youth, as many difficulties should be removed as possible. Where the text is printed by itself, the best method perhaps would be that which has already been adopted by many editors, viz. to insert in the text that reading, which, from reason or authority, seems indubitably certain, with the discarded reading in the margin; and, if a probable, but not absolutely certain, reading be proposed, to set it in the margin with some mark denoting the degree of authority or credibility to be allowed to it. Thus the reader would have before him, as it were, a history of the text, and could seldom fall into error but through his own negligence.

It will naturally be asked, Who shall decide what reading is indubitably certain? This decision must be in a great measure left to the discretion of the editor. What! are we to give every man, who sets up for a critic, an unlimited right of correcting ancient books at his pleasure? Not at his pleasure, but in conformity to certain laws well known and established by the general consent of the learned. He may transgress or misapply these laws, but without disowning their authority. No critic in his senses ever yet declared his resolution to put into the text what he at the time thought a wrong reading; and if a man, after perusing the works of his author perhaps ten times as often as the generality of readers,—after diligently comparing MSS.

MSS. and editions,—after examining what others have written relative to him professedly or accidentally,—after a constant perusal of other authors, with a special view to the elucidation of his own,—if, after all this, he must not be trusted with a discretionary power over the text, he never could be qualified to be an editor at all. Whatever editor (one, we mean, who aspires to that title,) republishes a book from an old edition, when the text might be improved from subsequent discoveries, while he hopes to shew his modesty and religion, only exposes his indolence, his ignorance, or his superstition. Dr. Edwards, after having, in his note on p. 3, approved an emendation by Casaubon, (ὑπειπόντες for ἰπειπόντες,) rejects it in his Addenda with this grave remark: ‘I grow daily more sensible of the great caution which is requisite in adopting emendations.’ This emendation has at least the warrant of a MS. Now, if ἰπειπόντες had been the common reading, which makes very good sense, and a MS. gave ὑπειπόντες, the same remark, inverted, would be equally just. The truth is, sometimes two readings have such equal claims, that it is very difficult to give a decisive preference to either. In this case, what blame can an editor deservedly incur, who inserts one in the text, if he faithfully informs us of the other?

We shall give a specimen or two where, as we think, Dr. Edwards might safely have been bolder, without incurring the censure of rashness. In p. 8. καὶ γὰρ τὸ ἦθος ἴσσι πολυχρόνιον. Here all the editors, from Xylander inclusively, saw that the addition of ἔθος was necessary. Dr. Edwards thus ratifies their opinion: 'Other copies have ἦθος: both (so far) right, for I would recommend καὶ γὰρ τὸ ἦθος ἔθος ἴσσι πολυχρόνιον.' If it were too much to give the additional word a settled habitation in the text, it might have been allowed to creep in between brackets.

In p. 11. the words εὐνοῦς καὶ still keep their place, to the utter extinction of the sense; while Dr. E. is contented with approving the emendation of Schneider and Westhusius εὐνούστραι.

P. 15. Speaking of the injudicious conduct
of

of parents, the author says, 'Ενίοτε γὰρ εἰδότες, αἰσθομένοις μᾶλλον αὐτοῖς τοῦτο λεγόντων, τὴν ἐνίαν τῶν παιδευτῶν ἀπειρίαν ἅμα καὶ μοχθηρίαν, ὅμως τούτοις ἐπιτρέπουσι τοὺς παῖδας. Some MSS. have αἰσθομένων, which, as Dr. Edwards approves it, he might more pardonably have admitted into the text, than have left nonsense in its place. One MS. gives αἰσθόμενοι ἄλλων, whence M. Brunck reads, with the slight addition of a letter, εἰδότες, ἢ αἰσθομένοι ἄλλων—This, however, has not the good luck to please Dr. E. 'Friget Brunckii emendatio.' In spite of this censure, we must own that we think the correction true, as far as it goes, but, perhaps, it conveys not the whole truth. The right reading seems to be, 'Ενίοτε γὰρ εἰδότες αὐτοὶ, ἢ αἰσθομένοι ἄλλων τοῦτο λεγόντων.

P. 42. Κατεπρόξατο might have been restored without scruple for κατεπράξατο, and a note might have been added containing some account of the word: see Valckenaer on Herodotus, iii. 36.

P. 54. Προῤῥίζους ἐπρίβουσιν. The author is so seldom guilty of indulging himself in the luxury of an elegant phrase, that Dr. E. ought ought to have justified him better than by quoting Schneider's note, with one example from the stupid play of Christus Patiens: for that example belongs of right to Euripides, with whom the writer of that drama has made very free.

P. 20. Φρονῖ manifestly signifies the same as μύγα φρονῖ. Dr. E. quotes a passage from Henry Stephens's Thesaurus, in which that learned man entertains some doubt of the integrity of the text. It would have been more useful to tyros, if he had referred them to Sylburgius, who, in his Appendix to Pausanias, p. 927. produces some passages from his author, where the same ellipsis is observable*. We shall quote the first as a specimen. Φρονήσας δὲ ἐφ' αὐτῶ, Καρχηδονίων—ἐναντία ἐπήρθη ναυμαχῆσαι. I. 12. p. 30.

In a book intended for the use of young men, though we by no means recommend an injudicious and undigested mass of commonplace, yet we think it useful and amusing to mark the similar passages that occur in other authors, whether such similarity were the effect of chance or design. Schneider thinks that he sees the vestige of an allusion to the poets in p. 21. "Ο γε μὴν πόλεμος χειμάρρου δίκην κ. τ. λ. He might have seen something more like one in the preceding sentence: ὁ χρόνος τ᾽ ἄλλα πάντ' ἀφαιρῶν τῷ γήρα προστίθησι τὴν ἐπιστήμην. Not unlike Menander (Fragm. ed. Cleric. p. 254.) Εἰ τ᾽ ἄλλ' ἀφαιρῶν ὁ πολὺς εἴωθεν χρόνος Ἑμῶν, τό γε* φρονεῖν ἀσφαλέστερον ποιεῖ. Passages to the same purpose might be quoted, but they are too well known, from Euripides, Ovid, and others. P. 36. Ἦδη δέ τις ἐγὼ εἶδον πατέρα, οἷς τὸ λίαν φιλεῖν τοῦ μὴ φιλεῖν αἴτιον κατίστη. This was a saying of Theophrastus† in his book De Amicitia, as we learn from Plutarch Cat. Minor. p. 777. B. It might have been mentioned, on occasion of the saying attributed to Theocritus the Chian Sophist, p. 45. that the same verse of Homer was applied by the Emperor Julian, when he was invested with the purple.

We have said that we thought Dr. E. sometimes redundant. We shall reduce our censure to two parts. He frequently quotes Stephens, Hoogeveen, and Viger, to explain the most obvious words and phrases. Who would have thought that a note translated by Girard, from the Scholiast on Aristophanes, was necessary to explain the meaning of the word sycophant? We are sensible, however, that a great latitude must be allowed in this respect; since that which is clear to one, may be obscure to another. Some may therefore, perhaps, be so far from thinking this minuteness superfluous, that they may even commend it as necessary.

We must, however, confess that we are totally unable to find out the necessity or propriety of illustrating Lennep's system of tenses in a book designed to teach Greek to the learners of that language. Mere learners cannot be edified by being told what a prodigious number of Greek roots formerly grew in the land, when they are informed at the same time that none are now remaining. Some of the grossest of the mistakes, which prevail concerning the tenses in our common grammars, grammars, might occasionally be rectified: but to proceed any farther ought to be reserved for those who have made the philosophy of language their study. It can only perplex young understandings, who ought to know that a thing is, before they inquire why it is so. Such remarks, therefore, ought very sparingly to be introduced in notes. If a critic should choose to favour the public with a description of this nature, let it be unmix'd with baser matter: or, if he has not materials enough to make a justum volumen, he might throw them into the form of an appendix, by which means the connection of the parts would be better preserved. Suppose a reader, without caring much about Plutarch, or at all about the notes, should nevertheless be very curious to understand Lennep's hypothesis of the Greek tenses illustrated by Dr. Edwards;—he would have to toil through a hundred and thirty pages of miscellaneous matter, and to pick up the scattered fragments of which he was in search.

Dr. Edwards will, perhaps, ask, What great harm is in all this, if the remarks themselves

be true, curious, and useful? Let us then examine some of the principles which he has laid down on the subject. The only genuine tenses are said to be six in each voice, i. e.

The { present, future, perfect, }
 { imperfect, aorist, pluperfect. }

In the active voice, therefore, these tenses are thus supposed to be formed:

*τυπῶ, τυτίσω, τύψα,
 ἰτύποι, ἰτύψα, ἰτύψαν.*

In the passive, thus:

τυπέομαι, τυτίσομαι, τυψάμαι, ἰτυπέομην, ἰτυψιόμην, ἰτυψάμην.

As for the rest of the tenses, the aorist and second future active, the aorists and futures commonly called passive, he disposes of them in this manner. The future second active is a non-existence; the second aorist active is an imperfect from an obsolete radix; the aorists commonly called passives are imperfects from verbs in μι, whose present tenses have absconded, and the future passives are futures from the same antiquated roots. The paulo-post-futurum is only the future passive with a reduplication.

We

We shall take the liberty to add our sentiments on this ingenious hypothesis, as far as we agree with it.

First, we allow that the second future active has no existence, which was also the assertion of Mr. Dawes. Secondly, we allow that the middle voice (if by the middle voice be meant a set of inflections differing by a native and inherent force from the active and passive voices) never did nor can exist, and that ἰτυψάμην is truly and properly an aorist passive. Without making, however, any particular objections to the foregoing scheme of tenses, we shall content ourselves with raising our doubts on some incidental points either implied in this statement, or connected with it and produced in other parts of the notes.

We are told, p. 64, that every circumflex indicates a contraction; and p. 107, that THE CIRCUMFLEX ACCENT is a most important key to the original Greek language.

FLAVIA the least and slightest toy

Therefore, 'as every verb first ended in ω,'

* [Atterbury.]

thus we must derive εμεινα :—μεινω, μεινωσσω, εμεινωσσω, εμεινωσσε, εμεινωσσει ; ‘and therefore comes it, that μείναι in the infinitive is circumflexed :’—but then, it seems to us that εμείνα in the indicative should be circumflexed, for εμίνα would, as far as we can see, have its accent on the antepenultima, and consequently its contraction would make it εμείνα. In virtue of this persuasion, the Doctor will not allow ἴδουκα and *εἶπα to be aorists, but makes them perfects by dint of his own authority. If this be the case, he must exterminate εἶπας, or issue a mandate that it may be every where altered to εἶπας, or εἶπών.

Why must εἰλίφθην come from λείφθημι? Because it cannot come from any thing else. We have looked through the notes, and we really cannot find any other reason. Δεῖφθημι too, we are told, comes from λειφθίω. Why? Caret responsio. Similar to this is another fancy, that ἰστήκω and other present tenses of the same form are not derived from the perfect ἴστηκα, but that the perfects are formed from them. These two positions resemble each the other so nearly, that we shall venture to ask the following parallel questions: If ἐλείφθην, ἐτάχθην, ἐζεύχθην, and a great number of like words do not belong, as tenses, to the train of λείπω, τάσσω, ζεύγω, etc. by what means came they to bear so exact a relation to them? If ἴσθήκω, κεκράγω, τιθήκω, and the like, be not formed from ἴστηκα, etc. how did they obtain their resemblance to the more simple verbs στάω, κράζω, θνάω, etc.? In p. 162, we are told, from Scheidius, that τίθημι is contracted from τιθεῖμι. Then it would be τιθέμι; and the contraction τιθῆμι would be circumflexed, to the manifest detriment of that important key.

Since there must no longer be any second aorist, Dr. Edwards directs all the participles, taken for participles of the second aorist, to be construed as of the present tense. If any person will take the trouble to turn to the two passages, p. 8, and p. 34, he will find that the context not only permits, but demands, a preterit sense.

Dr. Edwards is a little less sanguine here than in general; for, after allowing that in this very tract a passage occurs where the second aorist is manifestly contradistinguished from the present, he supposes that at first (i. e. before we can tell what they did) they used this form in a present sense, but afterward applied it as an aorist, for the sake of convenience.

If we suppose the accents to be infallible guides, (and infallible we must suppose them, unless we mean to find fault with the editor's circumflex,) the participle λαβὼν cannot be a present, because it has an acute tone. It is to no purpose to answer, that at first it was a paroxytone, but was altered for convenience; because a circumflex might be placed for convenience over a syllable where it could claim no right from a contraction.

Dr. Edwards has now and then given us an observation on other authors. Callimachus, says he, has a passage in his Hymn on Jupiter, 55, which has in vain exercised the wits of the critics;

Καλὰ μὲν ἤξιεν, καλὰ δ' ἔγραφες, οὐράνιε Ζεῦ.

This

This difficulty he solves by his panacea, of an old verb in μι, τράφειμι, which makes ἔτραφες, and which verb he proves to have existed from τράφειν, nutriti sunt. For our part, we shall be contented, in company with Messrs. Lennep and Ruhnken, to believe that the verse is spurious. In Homer's Hymn to Ceres, 211,

Δεξαμένη δ' ὀσίης ἕνεκεν πολυπότνια Δηώ,

Dr. Edwards would read, instead of ὀσίης ἕνεκεν, ὀσίης ἔπειν. ὀσίης, i. e. puris manibus:—but where does he find such an ellipsis of the word χείρ? Vossius in Ruhnken's note proposes ὀσίης ἐπέειν, which seems too learned. We believe that Mr. Tyrwhitt's conjecture, as it is the most easy, is most likely to be true,

Δεξαμένη δ' ὀσίης ἕνεκεν πῖς πότνια Δηώ,

In the foregoing remarks, we have given our opinion without reserve, but, we hope, without incivility. If any apology, for the degree of freedom which we have used, be thought necessary, we shall quote the following passage from Dr. Edwards's note, p. 162.

'I shall close this note with an excellent passage from Lennep; in which he justly cautions cautions us against paying an implicit deference to the decisions of the ancient or the modern grammarians.—Id nimirum semper tenendum est in hoc studiorum genere, parum, aut nihil fere, vidisse grammaticos; tam veteres, quam recentiores: adeoque nullo modo eorum placitis esse standum; nisi tum, quando ex ipsa linguæ natura petita esse ea appareat. Neque enim ad grammaticorum regulas linguæ fuerunt conditæ; sed ex linguis, multo usu populorum jam tritis, et excultis, regulæ tandem sunt formatæ. In quo opere, difficili admodum, qui ingenium suum exercuerunt, eorum unusquisque, pro sua sapientia, successum habuit; alius meliorem, alius deteriore: cumque nemo rectam viam, qua procedendum esset, videret, sed singuli leges sancirent, quas conjectando præsertim, putarent probabiles; inde natæ fuerunt tot anomalæ, quas si linguarum naturam penitus inspexissent, facile animadvertissent procul a linguis removendas esse.

ART.

ART. II. An Analytical Essay on the Greek Alphabet. By RICH. PAYNE KNIGHT. 4to. pp. 136. 15s. Boards. Elmsley. 1791.

FOR the seeming minuteness of this and similar investigations, the author of the present work makes the following apology, which we recommend to the attentive consideration of all whom it may concern :

‘ I cannot indeed but think, that the judgement of the Public, upon the respective merits of the different classes of Criticks, is peculiarly partial and unjust.

‘ Those among them who assume the office of pointing out the beauties, and detecting the faults, of literary composition, are placed with the orator and historian in the highest ranks ; whilst those, who undertake the more laborious task of washing away the rust and canker of time, and bringing back those forms and colours, which are the subject of criticism, to their original purity and brightness, are degraded with the index-maker and antiquary, antiquary, among the pioneers of literature, whose business it is to clear the way for those who are capable of more splendid and honourable enterprises.

‘ But, nevertheless, if we examine the effects produced by these two classes of Criticks, we shall find that the first have been of no use whatever, and that the last have rendered the most important services to mankind. All persons of taste and understanding know, from their own feelings, when to approve, and disapprove, and therefore stand in no need of instructions from the Critick; and as for those who are destitute of such faculties, they can never be taught to use them; for no one can be taught to exert faculties which he does not possess. Every dunce may, indeed, be taught to repeat the jargon of criticism, which of all jargons is the worst, as it joins the tedious formality of methodical reasoning to the trite frivolity of common-place observation. But, whatever may be the taste and discernment of a reader, or the genius and ability of a writer, neither the one nor the other can appear pear while the text remains deformed by the corruptions of blundering transcribers, and obscured by the glosses of ignorant grammarians. It is then that the aid of the verbal Critick is required; and though his minute labour, in dissecting syllables and analysing letters, may appear contemptible in its operation, it will be found important in its effect.

‘The office, indeed, of analysing letters has been thought the lowest of all literary occupations; but nevertheless as sound, though only the vehicle of sense, is that which principally distinguishes the most brilliant poetry from the flattest prose; and as, in the dead languages, all sound is to be known only from the powers originally given to the characters representing the elements of it; to analyse these characters, and to shew what their Powers really were, is the only way to acquire a knowledge of those sounds in which the antient poets conveyed their sense. A successful endeavour to obtain this end will not, I flatter myself, be deemed either trifling

trifling or absurd in this age of taste and learning.'

The work is divided into seven sections, of which we shall, in due order, endeavour to give our readers a general idea.

In Sect. I. Mr. Knight lays it down for a principle, that the first signs or notes of articulation among the Greeks were three; one labial, P, one dental, T, and one palatine, G (as pronounced by us before the vowels A, O, U). To these were soon added three others, nearly akin to the former, B, D, K. After giving us the history of these six consonants, with respect to the various changes which they have undergone, both in form and power, during their passage through so many ages and nations, Mr. K. proceeds to the examination of the three aspirates; 1. the common aspirate, or H, which, being added to each of the labials or dentals, makes three more consonants, χ, φ, θ; 2. the digamma, the power of which is nearly the same with our W; and, 3. the letter S, which Mr. K. calls the dental aspirate. He next gives gives an account of the five Greek vowels; one of which, the A, he derives from the Phœnicians; and the other four he supposes to be of Greek invention.

Sect. II. contains a system of metrical quantity, partly deduced from the foregoing observations, and partly from the practice of Homer, on whom Mr. K. bestows the following encomium :

‘As the Greek Alphabet was adapted to the language, and not the language to the alphabet, we shall find the practice perfectly accord with the theory, unless where local or vicious habits corrupted it. Even there we have the peculiar advantage in this language of possessing the Works of a poet (the most elegant, correct, and perfect of all poets), who lived before many such habits had been formed, and whose writings, therefore, though defaced by the varnishes of criticks, grammarians, and transcribers, are composed of materials so pure and simple, and executed with such precision and regularity, that we can still trace the minutest touches of the master’s hand, and ascertain, with almost mathematical certainty, the principles* upon which he wrought.

For

* 'This character of Homer's poems may, perhaps, startle those who are accustomed to receive their opinions, ready formed, from the futile, but pompous, assertions of certain self-created judges of literature; whose decisions, to the disgrace of the age, are not unpopular.'

With all due fear of this fulmination before our eyes, we cannot but think this character of Homer a little over-rated. Homer's poetry, however exalted and embellished by learning and genius, must partake of that rudeness and simplicity which are always incident to the infancy of language and of society. The champions for Homer, who attribute to him all possible perfection, who find in him not only all other arts and sciences, but also a philosophical grammar, and a philosophical system of metre, ought to be able to give a satisfactory answer to the following questions :

1. Who was Homer ?
2. Of what country was Homer ?
3. When did Homer live ?
4. Was the art of writing known in Homer's time, or not in use till after his death ?
5. Are the Iliad and Odyssey, as we have them at present, wholly written by the same person ?
6. Were the several parts of them arranged by the author in the same order in which they now appear ?

We feel no pleasure in scepticism : but, (as Dr. Johnson

For this reason I shall admit no general rule or principle of metrical quantity that is not justified by the practice of Homer; having found that his practice is always founded upon reason and analogy, whereas that of later poets was often regulated by local and temporary habit.'

On this ground Mr. K. builds three general conclusions :

' 1. A single vowel, representing a single act of vocal utterance or expiration, must necessarily be short, unless lengthened by a succeeding pause or obstruction of utterance; for the proper definition of a short syllable is, one that occupies only the time usually allowed to a single act of vocal utterance; whereas a long one is that which occupies the time usually appropriated to two; either observes on Shakspeare,) no question can be so innocently discussed as a dead poet's pretensions to fame; and the queries, which we have proposed, at least might serve to repress the triumph of those sanguine projectors, who, on the sole foundation of Homer's works, would erect a system of language :—a task which they themselves own to be a matter of extreme nicety and difficulty.

by being really a coalescence of two, or else by being delayed or impeded by some adscititious pause or obstruction.

‘ 2. A single vowel before a single mute consonant must necessarily be short, unless there be a pause between them ; for, as the consonant terminates the sound without adding to it, there will of course no pause accompany it. If, however, a second mute consonant follow, either in the same or a different word, the syllable, though not the vowel, will necessarily be long :—

‘ 3. A single vowel followed by an aspirate or liquid, either in the same or a different syllable, or even preceded by one in the same syllable, may be either long or short, since the constrained expiration, employed in sounding the aspirate or liquid, is a continuation of the vowel sound differently modified by the approximation or compression of the organs of speech, and may therefore be shortened or lengthened arbitrarily, according as the constrained expiration is continued for a greater or less time.—When two aspirates or liquids come together, or one of them be joined to a mute consonant, this constrained expiration will naturally be lengthened or obstructed, either of which will prolong the syllable.'

The reader will easily observe that, in copying these passages, we have only endeavoured to state Mr. Knight's opinions in his own words, omitting the arguments by which they are supported, the corollaries that he deduces from them, the collateral illustrations, answers to objections, etc. If we have room and leisure, we may perhaps hereafter briefly touch on some of these subjects.

The remainder of this section is chiefly occupied in examining the nature of the digamma; that instrument, by whose aid Dr. Bentley, Mr. Dawes, and other critics have proposed to work such miracles on Homer's poetry; to make those verses, which, for several thousand years, had been cripples, and had wanted their due complement of feet, move as nimbly as if nothing ailed them; nay, to restore to life and vigour even those which wanted a head.

There arises a doubt on the subject, to which, as far as we can find, Mr. K. has not attended.

attended. Dr. Bentley would restore the figure of the Æolic digamma in the Iliad and Odyssey. Dawes thinks that a sign of the same nature ought to be inserted for the instruction of modern readers: but he apprehends that, in Homer's time and country, though the power of the digamma existed, the use of the character was unknown. Now, if Homer wrote his own poems, (a point which Mr. K. does not venture to decide,) this question would certainly furnish ample matter for speculation. It will not be amiss to shew how fifty or sixty thousand digammas should desert all at once, and escape detection for so long a time.

Mr. Knight, with Mr. Dawes, supposes the true orthography of nouns now ending in σς to be EFΣ or EWΣ, and the cases to be EWOΣ, EWI, EWA, etc. In the genitives of the patronymics, the poets had the privilege, it seems, of using indifferently the Ionic and Æolic;

“ And if folks ask the reason for't, Say one was long, and t'other short.”*

Thus, if they wanted to begin a line, Αργεσσι-

δῖω and Πηλεῖδῖω presented themselves ; if to end a verse, Ἀργεῖδαω, and Πηλεῖδαω. Their prerogatives did not stop here. They had another resource in the method of spelling their words. For instance, if they divided their genitive cases in this manner, Ἀργεῖ-ωος, then the second syllable is short, and the patronymic must be formed in ἰδης ; but, if the digamma were added to the former syllable, that syllable became a quasi-diphthong ; and, being long, required the patronymic to be formed in ἰαδης. It appears, therefore, that the same word in Homer's verse has four several metres : 1. $\bar{a}\tau \mid \rho\bar{i} \mid w\bar{i}$
 $\delta\bar{a}w \mid \bar{o}$. 2. $\bar{a}\tau \mid \rho\bar{i} \mid w\bar{i} \mid \delta\bar{i}\omega$. 3. $\bar{a}\tau \mid \rho\bar{i}w \mid \bar{i}$
 $\bar{a} \mid \delta\bar{a}w \mid \bar{o}$. 4. $\bar{a}\tau \mid \rho\bar{i}w \mid \bar{i} \mid \bar{a} \mid \delta\bar{i}\omega$. Such are the liberties which poets enjoy ; *Sed Græci, quibus est nihil negatum, et quos Argæ, Argæ decet sonare.

Mr. K., however, has some scruples concerning the latter termination, and thinks it not improbable that the genitive αωο might, by apocope, be reduced to αω. Mr. K. ought to prove that the Greeks ever ended a word with the digamma. Till this be done, his Ατρειωιδων, αυτων, etc. make rather an uncouth figure.

In antient declination, the digamma, according to Mr. K., appears to have been the characteristic letter of the oblique cases in the masculine and neuter words terminating in ος and υς, and in the feminine in ω, ως, υς, α or η, though it is only wanting to sustain the metrical quantity in the Æolic genitives plural, such as, νυμφαρων, etc. The genitive of masculines in ος was at first οφο, (in Ionic, οιο) then οο, ο, and οφ, which afterward became ου. On the strength of this hypothesis, Mr. K. instead of Ἰλίου προπάροιθεν and ἀνεψίου κταμένοιο, writes Ἰλίοφο προπάροιθεν and ἀνεψίοφο κταμένοιο. (Ought it not to be κταμένοφο?) If Mr. K. had recollected two passages in the Odyssey, we suppose, he would have applied the same specific: Δῶρα παρ' Αἰόλοφο μμεγαλήτορος. Βῆν εἰς Αἰόλοφο κλυτὰ δώματα. Od. K. 36. 60. In a similar manner, he reduces the instances, in which ῶου occurs, to the regular inflection, †οφο.

From the equivocal power, which the digamma

gamma possesses of lengthening either of the syllables, to which it is joined, proceeds that inversion of prosody, which is observable in some words, as in *ῥεφος, Κρονίφονος, which, in modern orthography, may indifferently be resolved into ῥηος, ῥεός, and Κρονῖονος, Κρονῖανος.

Mr. K. examines the declinations of many other words, with a view to his system of Homeric prosody. It would be too tedious to give all his instances in detail. The participles he supposes to have originally ended in αις, εις, and ους. He dissents therefore from Dawes, (and, as it should seem, from Markland,) who believed that all these words once had τ in the nominative.

Sect. III. The author endeavours to rectify the orthography of Homer's words, by restoring the aspirates according to the directions of the metre. Mr. K. would replace the passage in the ninth Iliad which Aristarchus

* This cannot be denied to be a most convenient privilege for a poet, who, by the aid of such a licence, could of the same word make a pyrrichius, an iambus, and a trochee. By a similar process, Mr. K. solves the phenomena of μμάτος and μμάτος, expunged,

expunged, thinking, perhaps, that Phœnix's intention of murdering his father was too horrid an idea to be presented to the reader's mind. To introduce this discarded passage, however, Mr. Knight would himself expunge the 457th verse, and, in its place, immediately insert the four banished verses. In this section, also, Mr. K. tries his hand on many Homeric words, which have been reckoned the cruces Grammaticorum. ἄτη, ἀασάμην, ἄσαπο. ἄᾶᾶτος, ἄᾶᾶτος. ἀνήνοθεν, ἰπηνήνοθε. δία, δίος. ζεὺς, δίδω, δειδίσσω, δεῖνος, are a few words, out of a much greater number, which Mr. K. attempts to analyse, to reduce to their antient etymology, and to restore to their primitive orthography. We shall insert one specimen of his skill in this way :

‘Ἐως—†EFOΣ : wherefore the first syllable is frequently long and the second short. Barnes, indeed, supposed that ἔως ἰγὰ, at the beginning of a line, was an amphibrachys, equal to a dactyl; and Clarke, still more absurdly, that it ought to be pronounced as a spondee, by a sort of metathesis, ᾗσε ἰγὰ*.

* Odyss. 4. 90.’

The learned author of the book upon Rhythm would, in one place, divide the intermediate long syllable in a manner which I avow myself incapable of exactly comprehending* ; and, in another, elide the first syllable †, as the Dorians frequently did ; but, nevertheless, without extending the third in consequence of it, as he must do to fill the metre. All these refined conjectures are, however, superfluous, if we read the word in its original form and antient letters. In some passages, indeed, we find it in one syllable, as,

- Τὼ δ' ἕως μὲν ῥ' ἐπέοντο—‡
- Εἶχε βίη' ὁ δὲ τέως μὲν ἐνὶ μεγάροις Φυλάκιοι §.*
- * Ἔως μιν (al. μὲν) ἐν Ὀρτυγίῃ—||*
- * Ἔως μὲν γὰρ τε θεούσι—¶*

‘ But in each of these there is something redundant. In the two first the particle μὲν encumbers the sense as well as the metre ; and, in the third, the pronoun should be changed from μιν to the old regular form ἰ—

‘ * Lib. Sing. de Rythm. Græcor. p. 37.’

‘ † Ibid. p. 142.’ ‘ ‡ Odyss. B. 148.’

‘ § Odyss. O. 231.’ ‘ || Odyss. E. 123.’

‘ ¶ Iliad. P. 727.’

†EFOΣ †'EN OPTYTIHI*. The fourth has been corrupted by two different readings, μὲν and γὰρ being (as has frequently happened) joined in the text, the first of which is, in this instance, the best—†EFOΣ MEN TE ΘEFOYΣI—

‘ In another passage of the Odyssey ὡς ὄρε is written for †EFOΣ—Ἥσθιε δ' ὡς ὄτ' ἀοιδὸς ἐνὶ μεγάροισιν ἄειδεν†, instead of ΗΣΘΙΕ Δ' †EFOΣ AFOIΔΟΣ—and though [Thomas] Bentley found ἕως in a MS., Clarke did not chuse to adopt it, because Eustathius and the Scholiast have ὡς ὄρε.’

In the fourth section, the author farther pursues his employment of examining the derivations and declensions of Homer's words, and of rectifying, here and there, some slight corruptions which he apprehends to have crept into the text of his favourite poet. He properly enough observes ‘ that the writers, who succeeded the Macedonian Conquest, and

* Did Mr. K. ever meet with the pronoun † thus cut off, and nothing left of it but the aspirate? (Rev.)

considered the later Attic as the universal dialect, and standard for purity, were not likely to form very accurate notions of the style of Homer; for instead of considering their own grammatical flexions as corruptions of his, they considered his as licentious or poetical deviations from their own; wherefore they began their researches at the wrong end, and consequently, the farther they pursued them, the farther they were from the truth.'

Mr. K. then produces a passage, of which he pronounces the general sense injured :

' This is in the 22d Iliad, where Hector, certain of his death, on finding himself opposed, unassisted and alone, to Achilles, says, (v. 300.)

Νῦν δὲ δὴ ἐγγύθι μοι θάνατος κακός, οὐδέ τ' ἀνευθεν
 Οὐδ' ἀλή· ἢ γάρ ῥα πάλαι τό γε φίλτερον ἦεν
 Ζηνί τε καὶ Διὸς υἱεῖ ἐκηβόλῳ, οἷ μὲ πάρος γε Πρόφρονες εἰρύαται· νῦν αὐτὲ μὲ μοῖρα κισχάνει.

' Which, in its present form, literally signifies—Evil death is near me—not even separate—nor refuge—for it was indeed formerly agreeable to Jupiter and Apollo, who
before

before cordially defended me; but now Fate overtakes me. Instead of which, by only dropping the conjunction from the negative, and transposing a particle, we have

Nūn δὲ δὴ ἐγγύθι μοι θάνατος κακός, οὐ δὲ τ' ἀνευθεῖν Οὐκ ἀλήθῃ γάρ.—ἦ ρα πάλαι τόγε φίλτερον ἦεν, etc.

' Evil death is near me—not even separate; for no refuge.—It was, indeed, formerly agreeable to Jupiter and Apollo, etc. etc.'

We here take the liberty of stating a trifling difficulty that occurs to us. Is the particle ἦ aspirated? Or ought it to have the digamma prefixed? Or is the delay, which may be supposed to take place in consequence of the pause, sufficient to make the short syllable γάρ long? For unless one of these three suppositions be allowed, we frankly confess that, to our eyes and ears, the second foot of the verse seems very like a trochee.

Now that his hand is engaged in this business, Mr. K. very liberally dispenses the digamma to all the words which want it; insomuch that he prefixes it even to ἄριστον, and will not suffer the first syllable to be long, because because all the MSS. and editions read ἰνύ-νοστο ἄριστον without elision!

It is impossible to follow the learned author through this section, unless we nearly transcribe the whole. It consists of twenty-four examples, each of which contains two or more words, alike in their modern appearance: but, by the help of declensions, conjugations, and (above all,) the insertion of aspirates and digammas, Mr. K. discriminates their meaning and pronunciation. We cannot say, for our part, that we feel any lively approbation of Mr. K.'s exertions on this subject; we shall therefore copy two of his examples without any animadversions of our own:

- | | | | |
|--------|-------------|----------------|------|
| IX. 1. | δέω | ligo | ΔΕΩ |
| 2. | δήω | invenio | ΔΗΩ |
| 3. | δέω | egeo | ΔΕΦΩ |
| 4. | δέύω | rigo | ΔΕΥΩ |
| 5. | δύω | subeo | ΔΥΦΩ |

' The forms and flexions of these verbs are obviously pointed out by the sense and metre. From the first came ΔΗΜΟΣ, or ΔΕΦΜΟΣ, a people;

a people; and from the fourth, probably, δημὸς or ΔΕΥΜΟΣ, fat, which some antient grammarians, however, derived from δαίω or ΔΑΦΩ, to burn*; in which case it must have been written ΔΕΦΜΟΣ; and this may possibly be right.'

'XIX. 1. λῆς, gen. λῆος leo ΛΙΦΣ, gen. ΛΙΦΟΣ.

2. λῆς, gen. λῆτος lævis ΛΙΝΣ, gen. ΛΙΝΤΟΣ.

The first occurs only in the nominative and accusative singular in Homer, the latter of which is λῆνα † in our present copies; whereas it ought to be ΛΙΦΑ according to the rule of flexion here stated. In a passage of Callimachus, however, cited in the Venetian scholia, we have the dative plural λῆεσσι ‡, that is, ΛΙΦΕΣΙ, which proves that the Ν, in the accusative, is a corruption, introduced to sustain the syllable rendered defective by the loss of the F.

'I have ventured to suppose that the Ν ought to be added in the second, not only because it is a word of the same signification and etymology as ΛΙΝΟΝ, but because this letter has been dropped, as before observed,

out of many words, which in antient Inscriptions are formed with it.'

In Example XXII. Mr. Knight quarrels with the word ἔρυμα, (which occurs in the editions of Homer* for defence,) because ἐρύω does not signify to defend, but to draw. He therefore would substitute ῥῦμα; or, as he would write it, ΡΥΦΜΑ. To this emendation we beg leave to make two objections:—first, Mr. K. cannot prove that ῥύω and ἐρύω have not originally the same meaning:—secondly, he is bound to produce an instance of the word ῥῦμα in Homer himself:—but what need of alteration? Mr. K. confesses that the word ἔρυμα is used by later writers to signify defence; and is not Sophocles one of these later writers? Yes: but luckily the verse from Ajax, Πρὸς ἔρυμα Τρώων, will equally admit ῥῦμα. Let Mr. K., then, amend the following passages:

Æschyl. Eumenid. 704. (704.)

* Ερυμά τε χώρας καὶ πόλεως σωτήριον.

Euripid. Med. 602. (597.)

Φῦναι † τυράννου παιδᾶς, ἔρυμα δάμασι.

Bacch. 55.

* Ἄλλ', ὃ λιποῦσαι Τρωῶλον, ἔρυμα Λυδίας.

* Il. Δ. 137.

From

From ἔρυμα is formed the adjective ἔρυμνός, which occurs in Euripides Helen. 68, and three times in Lycophron. Homer also employs the epithet ἔρυσίπτολις, but that Mr. K. alters to ῥυωσίπτολις: for it is probable, he thinks, that some copiers or stonecutters first changed ΠΥΦΜΑ to ΠΥΕΜΑ, and that the next transcribers, or readers, not knowing what to make of ΠΥΕΜΑ, changed it to ἔρυμα. Thus the Greeks corrupted their language by the addition of a word of nought.

In the last example, Mr. K. commits two small mistakes. He makes σῶσιν in Herodotus to be a contraction of ΣΟΦΟΥΣΙΝ, and accuses Valckenäer of making it an abbreviation of σῆθουσι:—but Valckenäer says nothing of this sort; he only observes that it is put for σῆθουσιν. The truth is, σῶ is the primitive of σῆθω, as ἀλῶ of ἀλήθω, κνῶ of κνήθω, νῶ of νήθω: but the Ionians could never contract σῶουσι into σῶσιν. If such a contraction existed in any dialect, it would be in the Doric.

Sect. V. contains Mr. K.'s system of the κ

flexions of the verbs, with some remarks on Dr. Clarke and Lord Monboddo.

‘Those who wish to know the progress and detail of these great discoveries, will consult the printed works of these learned persons,’ (Hemsterhuis, Valckenäer, Damm, etc.) ‘particularly the Analogia Græca of Lennep. I shall here only give the result of them, in a short table, showing how the middle voice and the second futures and aorists have been formed out of different themes of the same verbs, only fragments of which have continued in use. These fragments I shall place under their proper heads, and with the proper explanations, leaving the spaces of all the obsolete forms, except the first, which is the theme itself, void.’

Mr. K. then gives us a paradigm of the indicative and infinitive modes in the active and passive voice. We shall be contented with representing the indicative mode; at the same time begging pardon of Mr. K. for spoiling the look of his scheme, and assuring him that we shall faithfully adhere to his system.

ACTIVE

ACTIVE VOICE.

Present Imperf. τύπτω, τύπω, τυπέω, τύφω, τύφημι.

Past Imperf. ἔτυπτον, ἔτυπον, vulgarly the second Aorist.

Future Imperf. τύψω, τυπῶ, the Attic future contracted from τυπίσω (the root τυπέω).

Aorist, ἔτυψα.

Present Perf. τέτυκα (the root τύπω) contracted from τετύπεκα, and adopted for the middle voice; τέτυφα (root τύφω) contracted from τετύφεκα.

Past Perf. ἔτετύπειν, contracted from ἔτετυπέκειν, and adopted for the middle voice; ἔτετύφειν, contracted from ἔτετυφέκειν.

(In the active voice, no past future.)

PASSIVE VOICE.

Present Imperf. τύπτομαι, τύπομαι, τυπέομαι, τυφθίομαι;—τύπημι and τύφθημι, active forms used in a passive sense.

Past Imperfect, ἔτυπτόμην.—ἔτυπόμην, vulgarly the second Aorist. ἔτύπην (root τύπημι) vulgarly the second Aorist.

ἰτύθην (root τύθημι) vulgarly the first Aorist.

Future Imperf. τύψομαι.—τυπούμαι, the Attic future contracted from τυπίσομαι to τυπίομαι, and thence to the present form, which is called the second future middle.—τυφθήσομαι (from the root τυφθίομαι).

Aorist, ἰτυψάμην, adopted for the middle voice.

Present Perf. τίτυμμαι, contracted from τυτύπαμαι, which seems originally to have been τυτυπίκαμαι.

Past Perf. ἰτυτύμμην, which has been contracted in the same manner.

Past Future, τυτύψομαι.

The reader, who has leisure and inclination, may compare this system with that of Dr. Edwards, of which we gave an account in our 11th volume, New Series, p. 257. We think, as we then said, that Dr. Edwards rightly discards the second futures: but this does not materially injure Mr. Knight's hypothesis, as they may be spared as a superfluity. He justly censures Lord Monboddo for for his extravagant idea that βεβήκει, τετρήχει, etc. are present imperfects of new themes, βεβήκω, τετρήχω, etc. and for his still more extravagant notion that ἔληλατο and ἠρήμιστο are Aorists. On the first of these heads, Mr. Knight candidly defends Dr. Clarke* against the learned judge; who seems to lose both his good sense and his temper, whenever he finds the editor of Homer in his way.

[* “ Amongst Dr. Clarke’s papers was found a letter of that great Greek scholar Dr. Bentley to him, expressive of his concurrence of opinion with him upon the formation of the tenses of the Greek verbs, which he has so fully illustrated in a note on the first book of his edition of Homer.” Anecd. of distinguished Persons, vol. ii. p. 314. That Dr. BENTLEY did accede to Dr. C.’s philosophical distribution of time, as well founded, I mean not to dispute: but that HE sanctioned the theory as applicable to the Greek tenses, I am not prepared to believe.]

Review

Review of Mr. KNIGHT'S Analytical Essay on the Greek Alphabet concluded.

WE have already given an abridged account of the first five sections of this work. The sixth and seventh are devoted to the examination of some (supposed) ancient monuments produced by M. Fourmont in the French Academy of Belles Lettres and Inscriptions*, and of the Lacedæmonian decree against Timotheus, which has been lately republished separately at Oxford by a learned and respectable prelate.

Mr. Knight's examination of the first of these subjects tends to prove that the lists of Spartan priestesses, etc. which M. Barthelemy has endeavoured to illustrate, are forgeries of M. Fourmont. He informs us, that many of the objections, which he here states, were

* Tom. XXIII. p. 394—421. At the end of the volume, are added fac-similes of the inscriptions, which are also copied at the end of Mr. K.'s Essay.

first put together for the use of M. d'Hancarville, author of the Récherches sur les Arts de la Grèce, whose defence in reply to them his remaining observations are intended to answer.

Since these monuments, which, if they were genuine, would require particular notice in such a book as Mr. K.'s, are tacitly, throughout the work, rejected by him, it doubtless became his duty to declare his reasons for dissenting from so many learned persons*, who have without scruple appealed to these inscriptions as undoubted specimens of the most antient method of writing.

When M. Fourmont returned from Greece, he professed to have discovered a copy of the laws of Solon; and to have employed 2000 men in digging the ruins of Amyclæ, where he found monuments of greater antiquity than any hitherto known. Of these he published a few specimens, but did not proceed; and he left his MSS. in the King's library, whence other specimens have been published in the Traité Diplomatique, by the Benedictines, and in the Mémoires of the Academy, by Abbé Barthelemy. A large volume of MSS. is shewn in the library: but that, Mr. K. thinks, is not the collection which Count Caylus excuses the Academy for not publishing, on account of the enormous expense which it would require. This reason Mr. K. treats as frivolous; and he thinks that a free examination of what is published will betray the concealed reason for withholding the rest. He says that the laws of Solon, and the 2000 men employed at Amyclæ, are now given up; it being discovered that all Peloponnesus would scarcely have afforded so many labourers; and he was informed by the late Mr. Stuart, who followed Fourmont, that Fourmont employed as many men as he could collect,—not to discover inscriptions, but to break in pieces those which were already brought to light*.

* If these facts be authentic, we, for our part, should scarcely desire more evidence to persuade us that the inscriptions in question are forgeries; since, of these three circumstances, the first two shew the most deliberate falsification, and the third manifests a violent dread of detection.

The

The inscriptions published contain specimens of writing, from King Eurotas, seven generations* prior to the Trojan war, down to Philip of Macedon. We might therefore expect to find great variety in the form and use of the letters, but they appear to be the same person's writing and composition. M. Fourmont's Sigma, which is taken from the Gortynian medals, is really an Iota, and the title is to be read, Mr. K. says, ΓΟΡΤΥΝΙ (for Γορτυνίων) not ΓΟΡΤΥΝΣ. This conformity is badly explained by the permanence of the Lacedæmonian manners and customs, which were twice changed during the above-mentioned period; first by the invasion of the Dorians, and afterward by the institutions of Lycurgus. The forms of the bucklers, on which two of the inscriptions are engraven, are totally unlike the simple round shields of the antient Greeks; they are in absurd and fanciful shapes, and are unfit for purposes of defence.

Fourmont discovered a temple dedicated to the Goddess ONGA or OGA, which no other traveller has been able to find. Wanting an antient name for the Lacedæmonians, he gave them, in his inscription, the title of ΙΚΤΕΡΚΕΡΑΤΕΕΣ, because Meursius produces a short article from Hesychius, Ἰκτεροκαρασίς. Λάκωνος. and concludes that the Lacedæmonians were once called Ἰκτεροκαρασίς. Fourmont alters the orthography a little: (perhaps he intended to read ΙΚΕΤΕΟΚΕΡΑΤΕΕΣ.) but the learned men, who have lately edited Hesychius, agree in supposing that a Laconic word has been joined to its explanation; and that they ought to be separated into Ἰκτεῶ. κηάσι*. Numberless instances are found in Hesychius, in which the name of a people is thus subjoined to a word, in order to denote that the word was chiefly used by that people. Indeed, Hesychius is so corrupt an author that, when he is a solitary witness, his evidence ought to be received with great caution. Mr. K. in a different part of this chapter, objects (and, we think, justly,) to another of Fourmont's inscriptions: in which the word ΒΑΓΟΣ is used for στρατηγός, and defended by the authority of the same Hesychius.

chius. Mr. Larcher, in the notes to his translation of Herodotus, not suspecting either the inscription or Hesychius, would, on their authority, introduce the word βαγοῦ into a Greek epigram* on Leonidas, instead of ταγοῦ, a word quite proper and poetical, confirmed by Suidas in ν. ταγός.

The next inscription is a catalogue of the priestesses of Amyclæ, beginning about the same time with the dedication of the temple. The priestesses are called ΜΑΤΕΡΕΣ ΚΑΙ ΚΟΥΡΑΙ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΛΛΩΝΟΣ, for which neither M. Barthelemy, nor the author of the Récherches, has been able to produce any authority, except a correspondent title in the modern French convents of nuns, Les Mères et les Filles du bon Dieu; whence Mr. K. suspects that the French title gave birth to the Greek.

Mr. K. next objects to the orthography and declension of many of the proper names, such as Αριστανδερο, Αριστομαχο, Καλλικρατο, &c. which, according to Fourmont, are the genitive cases of the words which we now write, Αριστανδρος, Αριστομαχος, Καλλικρατης, etc. The termination of other nouns, which ought to be in ιος, is also, in these inscriptions, made ιο without the Sigma. The interpolation of the vowels Mr. K. attributes to Fourmont's study of Hebraisms, after he had learned, from Josephus, that the Jews and Lacedæmonians derived themselves from a common stock. We think with Mr. K. that this interpolation seems utterly to subvert the analogy of the Greek language.

To mark the period of the Dorian invasion, the terminations of the names of the priestesses are changed from what Fourmont thought Æolic or Ionic to Doric. Hence ΑΜΥΜΟΝΕΕ, in the beginning of the inscription, afterward becomes ΑΜΥΜΟΝΑ: but the two Epsilons for an Eta are unautho- rized by antient monuments, and are expressly contradicted by a passage of Plato*.

[* Οὐ γὰρ Η ἐχράμεθα, ἀλλ' Ε τὸ παλαιόν. Cratyl. p. 63. edd. Bas.=274. F. Laemar.=II. 426. H. St.]

The

The dialect, too, of the antient Laconians was the Æolic; for Strabo tells us that the fugitives, who were driven out of the Peloponnesus by the Dorians, founded the first Æolian colonies in Asia.

This monument would have fixed so many events to their proper dates, that it must have escaped all travellers and antiquaries, though it existed in one of the most celebrated temples and most frequented provinces. Mr. K. answers an argument of a similar nature, brought against the Parian Chronicle, (a monument which he declares to be undoubtedly antient;) adding that M. d'Hancarville has shewn that Fourmont's inscription fixes the reigns of the fabulous kings of Lacedæmon to the period in which Lydiat and Marsham would place them; which, says Mr. K. it would naturally do, having been fabricated from their writings, and from those of Cragius and Meursius.

Mr. K. then reasons on two suppositions; the first, that the Cadmean was the primitive alphabet of Greece; the second, that the Pelasgian preceded it; and he concludes that the inscriptions appear to be false on either hypothesis.
the

The shield containing the pedigree of Teleclus might be found in Meursius, from which it only differs in a K for a X; and in the barbarous genitive ΛΑΒΟΤΑΣ. (Βαγὸς we have already mentioned.)

In two other inscriptions, containing lists of the kings, senators, and magistrates of Sparta, during the Messenian war, Mr. K. finds many causes of suspicion; some furnished by Hesychius, some relating to the orthography and inflexions of the words employed. He observes that the form of these inscriptions is not less extraordinary than the substance; they being both signed by the public secretary, and authenticated by the public seal.

In a votive shield inscribed with the name of Anaxidamus, the son of Zeuxidamus, the pedigree is thus continued: Anaxidamus, the son of Zeuxidamus, the son of Anaxander, the son of Eurycrates. This pedigree, differing entirely from that given by Meursius from Pausanias, has afforded matter of much triumph triumph to the defender of these inscriptions:—but Fourmont, carelessly casting his eye on Meursius, and observing Anaxidamus, son of Zeuxidamus, to follow Euryates and Anaxander, without regarding the words ex alterâ familiâ, confounded the two royal houses. This argument appears so clear and cogent, to us at least, that we think it must decide the fate of the inscription*.

Several other objections are brought against the authenticity of these monuments, which certainly render them extremely questionable; and, if they be really genuine, we wish them with all speed an able defender to support their credit.

The seventh section of Mr. K.'s Essay contains a criticism on the decree of the Lacedæmonians against Timotheus. This decree being itself the record of a curious fact, and at the same time a monument of the antient

* We shall take the liberty of correcting two slight errors in this page of the work, (128,) one probably the fault of the printer, the other Mr. K.'s oversight. In l. 9. read Anaxidamus for Archidamus; and in l. 12. for 'the son and grandson of Theopompus,' read, 'the grandson and great grandson of Theopompus.'

Spartan dialect, has been frequently the subject of learned observations. Joseph Scaliger attempted to give a complete copy of it in his notes to Manilius*; as did also, about the same time, Isaac Casaubon, in his animadversions upon Athenæus†. James Gronovius gave the readings of a different copy in the preface to the fifth volume of Greek Antiquities. Chishull‡, assisted by this collation, then endeavoured to restore it; and in the year 1777 the learned Dr. Cleaver, bishop of Chester, republished it at Oxford with a new commentary and collations.

Mr. K. first represents this famous decree as it stands in the edition of Glareanus, with the marginal variations; next as it is given by Gronovius; thirdly, as the bishop of Chester has published it, with the various readings of the Oxford MSS.; and lastly, as the learned prelate himself would read it. Mr. Knight decides, however, that most of the bishop's emendations are either unnecessary,

sary, or tend to eject every curious provincial peculiarity that is not readily understood, and to fill its place with a word from the known dialects.

The Bishop would write Τιμόσιορ for Τιμόθιος, κισάριξιν* (as we suppose) for κισάρισιν, and μῦσος for μῦθος: but Mr. K. thinks that this difference was confined to the pronunciation alone, and did not affect their orthography. Are we then to suppose that, in all the places in which Aristophanes employs the σ for the ϑ, he only means to accommodate the Lacedæmonian pronunciation to the Attic orthography? If we be certain of any thing, we are certain that they at least wrote σιὸς † for ϑεὸς, though we are willing to grant Mr. K., but for another reason, that the Lacedæmonians did not write Τιμόσιορ in this decree. Mr. K. objects to μῦσος, because it would confound μῦθος with a different word, but his own μίτω is liable to the same objection. We think that no doubt can be entertained of καινότατος, which is also approved by Mr. K.: but we cannot agree with his ἀτιμάσδε for ἀτιμάσδει*, as the present time seems necessary. Out of ποιτὰν others have made ποιῶν, with which Mr. K. is not contented, preferring ποιῆταν, which is put for ποιῆσαν, which is put for ποίσασαν. We are almost tempted to suspect some grievous mistake of the press in this passage.

After δέδοχθαι follows φὰ or φάρ, which the editor of the decree rejects: but Mr. K. thinks that it related either to the senate which enacted, or to the senator who moved, the decree; probably to the latter. Allowing this, what part of speech is φὰ or φάρ?—That our readers may judge what clear, pleasant, and consistent things various readings sometimes are, we will give them a very short passage of this famous decree, accompanied with the needful collations. The first we take from Glareanus:

—οὐκ ἐνδέκατος Νέος διδαχὴν ἐδίδαξε. Ἐῖτα περὶ τούτων τὸν βασιλεῖαν⁸ καὶ τοῦ ῥήτορος⁹ μίμψεται Τιμόθεον.

This is plain, correct, and elegant; and, if it be not the genuine reading, cannot be far from it:—but, if any man likes marginal readings better, let him take the following:

⁸ τοὺς βασιλείας. ⁹ τῶν ῥητορῶν.

These various readings are also very good. The Oxford edition reads thus in the text—οὐκ ἔνδικα τὸς νέος δίδακκε. Δίδοχθαι²⁴ φὰ²⁵ περὶ²⁶ τούτοις τὸς βασιλείας καὶ τὸς ἑφόρος μίμ-ψατται²⁷ Τιμόθειον.

Various readings.

²⁴ Δίδοκται al. ²⁵ φὰρ Bodl. ²⁶ ὑπὲρ al.
²⁷ μίμψαται al.

James Gronovius has made his copy more intelligible, but he does not seem to have rigidly adhered to MSS. He, too, has inserted φᾶν. Perhaps εἶπα (from Glareanus's εἶτα) might serve, if Mr. K's idea be approved. Ἐπανάκαται is written in most MSS., which Mr. K. derives from ἀκος, care, ἀνακῶς, care-fully; whence ἐπανακίω, or -κάω, ἐπανάκασαι, ἐπανάκαται. Such violent straining to make the text literally agree with the reading of the MSS. would be justly liable to suspicion in any ancient Greek author, whose works had been transcribed by Greek copiers, and had come down to us in a tolerable state of correctness:—but, when we consider how miserably the Latin scribes mangled or murdered the Greek passages which their authors quoted; many of which are left in a desperate condition, unless we shall light on MSS. of greater age and worth than we have hitherto had the good fortune to find; in this labyrinth of various readings, or rather of varieties of blunders, it would be rash to promise ourselves a clue to direct us always to the genuine reading. In cases of dialect, particularly, these MSS. of Boëthius ought to be discarded as incompetent witnesses. We shall only add that the late Mr. Toup, having occasion to speak of this decree, on which he would probably have tried his skill, if he had not found the errors too numerous and obstinate, dismissed it, only calling it corrupto corruptius. (In Suidam, v. $\chi\iota\acute{\alpha}\zeta\iota\upsilon$ *)

Lest it should be said of us that we are apt enough to object to the opinions of others, without giving them an opportunity of making reprisals, we will present Mr. K. with the latter part of the decree, as we think it probably ought to be read :

Δίδοχθαι περὶ τούτων τῶν βασιλῆα καὶ τῶν Ἐφόρων* μεμφάσθαι Τιμόθειον, ἱπαναγκάζαι δὲ καὶ τῶν ἑνδεκα χορδῶν ἑκταμόντα τὰς περιτὰς ὑπολίπην μόνον τὰς ἑκτα· ὅπως ἕκαστος τὸ τῶν πόλιος βᾶρος ὄρων εὐλάβηται ἑστάν Σπαρτᾶν ἐπιφέρειν τι τῶν μὴ καλῶν, ἢ τῶν μὴ ποττὸ τὰς ἀρετῶν κλέος ἀγόντων.

If we be right in our conjectures, several emendations of other critics are wrong; if we be wrong, we are not likely to be more unfortunate than they have been:—but we are at a loss to understand Mr. K's meaning, when he calls ταράσται the Laconian form of the second aorist subjunctive middle.

We could make several other remarks on this Essay, and might propose several other objections: but we must now dismiss it with a general, but short, character.

The author is a man of reading, learning, and inquiry. His taste and knowledge seem to predominate rather in the antiquarian's province, as it is generally called:—but, when he traces the history of language, and the etymology of words, he gives too much scope to conjecture and imagination. In the execution of his plan, he unnecessarily contracts his foundation, by building only on the ground-work of Homer; and, while he denies that particular changes of sounds and words can take place except in one certain prescribed mode, he allows too little to the changes, caprices, conveniences, etc. which produce the fluctuations. We have, however, perused his Essay generally with entertainment, sometimes with instruction and approbation; and Mr. K. may deserve, at least, this praise, that the errors in his research are sometimes more to the purpose than the successful inquiries of others.

P. S. We forgot, when we treated of the word 'ΕΡΥΜΑ in our last number, to observe that a kindred form, 'ΕΡΥΣΜΟΣ, occurs in the newly-discovered Hymn to Ceres, attributed to Homer, 230.

To the Editor of the Monthly Magazine.

SIR,

I AGREE with Mr. Cogan, that the passages of Euripides and Sophocles sufficiently defend one another, and prove, at least in poetry, the legitimate use of the verb τυγχάνειν without the participle ῶν.

My friend Mr. C. Falconer, jun. pointed out to me another mistake in Mr. Porson's note, which Mr. Cogan has omitted to correct, either through forbearance or oversight. If in Euripides, Androm. 1116. we read [Εὐζαίτο Φοίβη] ἔτυχε δ' ὦν ἐν ἐμπύροις, there will be an hiatus valde deflendus, which Mr. Porson will, I dare say, retract, when it is mentioned to him. I draw this conclusion from two of his own notes, one upon the 571st verse of the Hecuba, where he quotes with approbation my namesake's (Dawes. Misc. Crit. p. 216, 217.) censure of a similar mistake of King's; the other on Orestes,
v. 792,

v. 792, where Mr. Porson proposes a conjecture to remedy the same fault in a comic poet.

While I am on this subject of the hiatus, it may not be improper to rescue another passage from the attacks of critics. Machon (Athenæus xiii. p. 580. D.) tells us, that Gnathæna, seeing a young butcher, said to him, Μειράκιον ὁ καλὸς, φησὶ, πῶς ἴσσης, φράσον; "My pretty lad, tell me how you sell (your meat)." Your readers, sir, who recollect Shallow's questions, "How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?" "How a score of ewes now *?" will readily agree, that πῶς ἴσσης is at least good English. But Lennep, in a note upon Phalaris, p. 95. 1. will not allow it to be good Greek; so corrects it to πόσου ἴσσης, and falls into the error I have just exposed. Mr. Jacobs, in a note upon the Anthology, approves of Lennep's correction. Let us try to defend the vulgar reading by a quotation from Aristophanes, Eq. 478. Πῶς οὖν ὁ τυρὸς ἐν Βοιωτοῖς ἄνιος; but, see what a general prejudice has taken place in behalf of πόσου against poor πῶς! Gerard Horreus would read πόσου ὃ ὁ τυρὸς. This conjecture Pierson (on Mœris, p. 424.) refutes by producing Acharn. 768. Τί δ' ἄλλο, Μεγαροῖ πῶς ὁ σῖτος ἄνιος; to which when your readers have added a fragment of Strattis (apud Polluc. iv. 169.) Τὰ δ' ἄλφιθ' ὑμῖν πῶς ἐπάλουσι; τεττάρην Δραχμῶν μάλιστα τὸν κόφινον, they will consent to let Machon and Aristophanes enjoy their old reading.

To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle.

SIR,

As a learned friend of mine was rummaging an old trunk the other day, he discovered a false bottom, which, on examination, proved to be full of old parchments. But what was his joy and surprise when he discovered that the contents were neither more nor less than some of the lost tragedies of Sophocles! As the writing is difficult, and the traces of the letters somewhat faded, he proceeds slowly in the task of decyphering. When he has finished, the entire tragedies will be given to the public. In the mean time I send you the following fragment, which my friend communicated to me, and which all critics will concur with me, I doubt not, in determining to be the genuine production of that ancient dramatist. His characteristics are simplicity and sententiousness. For instance stance, what can be more simple and sententious than the opening of the Trachiniae?—“It is an old saying that has appeared among mankind, that you cannot be certain of the life of mortals, before one dies, whether it be good or evil.” These qualities, too, are conspicuous in the following Iambics, which contain a seasonable caution to parents against rashly trusting children out of their sight.—Though your paper is chiefly occupied in plain English, you sometimes gratify your learned readers with a little Greek: you may therefore give them this, if you think that it will gratify them. For the benefit of those whose Greek is rather rusty with disuse, I have added a Latin version, which, I hope, is as pure and perspicuous as Latin versions of Greek Tragedies commonly are.

I am, Sir, &c.

INTERCIDISSE orationem Agaves, quod suspicatus erat Tyrwhittus, certissime ostendit Apsines Rhetor qui eam duobus locis commemorat; sc. p. 723. Ed. Ald. *παρὰ τῷ Εὐριπίδῃ τοῦ Πενθέως ἡ μήτηρ Ἀγαυὴ ἀπαλλαγεῖσα τῆς μανίας καὶ γνωρίσασα τὸν παῖδα διεσπαρμένον κατηγορεῖ μὲν ἑαυτῆς, ἔλεον δὲ κινεῖ. Id si non potest, velut post murum aliquem se occultabit, pulverem evitans: suamque et aliorum, quoad poterit, rectam institutionem curabit; et ubique noctu dieque observabit, apud suos consanguineos, apud cognatos, apud alios cives, si quod incidat negotium, quod suo adiuvento indigeat. Cum e plerisque MSS. folium excidisset, et in editis omnibus legeretur, ἀλλὰ καὶ Ξενοφῶν τοὺς μυρίους ἐκείνους διέσωσε, καὶ τῶν Ὀλυμπίων ἐξεκήρυχθη, conjecit Wolfius, καὶ ἐν Ὀλυμπίοις ἀνεκηρύχθη, et ita vertit, Quin et Xenophon, decem illis Græcorum millibus conservatis, Olympico præconio est ornatus. Unde vero hanc historiam rescivit Wolfius? Wolfii tamen conjecturam secutus est Dacerus in Gallica versione. Quin et nuper in appendice ad Gallicam suam Herodoti versionem Vol. VII. p. 680. hæc habet Larcherus: “Olympiade XCVI. 1. Xénophon proclamé aux jeux Olympiques pour avoir sauvé les dix-mille. Simplicius in Epictetum, pag. 153.” Istam lacunam, ait Schweighæuser, p. 350. ex optimo codice nostro Pa. qui continuo tenore ea omnia, quæ hic adposuimus, persequitur, explere nobis contigit: quod et nobis eo jucundius accidit, et lectoribus hujus libelli eo gratius futurum confido, quod cum per se pulcherrimum est argumentum hoc ipso loco a Simplicio tractatum, tum vero miro quodam respectu ad tempora simillima eis, quæ haud ita pridem ipsam nostram rempublicam oppressam tenuerant, memorabile.

Sed, dum chartæ aliquid superest, duo vel tria alia Simplicii loca breviter illustremus.

P. 223. Tragici cujusdam versus, Τολμῶ κατειπεῖν, μή ποτ' οὐκ εἰσὶν θεοί. Κακοὶ γὰρ εὐτυχούντες ἐπιπλήττουσί με, propter impietatem, credo, Euripidi tribuit Barnesius. Sed scribendi color longe ab Euripideo distat. Legendum vero, ἐκπλήττουσι, non ἐπιπλήττουσι. Hi tamen, si minus Euripidei, sunt certe versus. Idem enim alibi Barnesius dupliciter peccavit; cum proverbium, a Simplicio p. 267. usurpatum, διὸ καλῶς εἴρηται, ὅτι ἡ χωρὶς λόγων τράπεζα, φάτης οὐδὲν διαφέρει, primo senarium, deinde deinde Euripideum, facit. Et senarium quidem fecit, sed Comicum vocat Salmasius de Usuris, p. 353. Similem Barnesii errorem, utcunque a re præsentī alienum, non injucundum erit notare. Inter fragmenta Euripidei Alexandri citat et hoc e Galeni Vitæ scriptore: δεῖ δὲ οὐ ταῖς φήμαις τῶν ὀνομάτων ἐξελέγχεσθαι τοὺς τρέπους. Hunc scriptorem se invenire non posse queritur Musgravius. Is est Renatus Charterius, qui splendidam Hippocratis et Galeni editionem procuravit. Locum scilicet hunc, e Caii oratione pro Lucilla apud Stobæum LXVII. p. 424, 27. depromptum, Charterius ad Euripidis Alexandrum retulit, quod ejus fabulæ versus a Stobæo jam antea laudatus esset, *Ἐκ τῶν ὁμοίων οἱ κακοὶ γαμοῦσ ἀεὶ.

Multum molestiæ doctissimo Schweighæusero facessiverunt isti Theoriones et Paxamones; et in his quidem verum quasi per transennam vidit; in illis prorsus a scopo aberravit †. Lege Θιαρίωνας καὶ Παξάμους †. Paxamus, ut recte conjicit vir doctus, est Ἄψαγτυτικῶν et aliorum librorum scriptor idem, qui ab Athenæo, Geponicis et Suida laudatur. Theorion pistor fuit Socratis et Aristophanis tempore celeberrimus, a Platone in Gorgia memoratus, a Themistio et sæpius ab Aristide. ἀνθρώπε. οὐκέτ' εἰσὶν ἐκείνοι δεσπόται. ὡς καὶ κα
λόν σου φαίνεται τὸ νεώριον. ἀλλὰ μεθ' ἑλλησπον

ἔτι δὲ μετὰ τῶν τειχῶν αὐτὸν βλέπεις, ἄλλα δὲ

σα δὲ ὡς ἐπὶ συμφοραῖς, ἀπεκείρατο καὶ τούραν πῶς φασὶν εἶσθιν ἐν καλῶ. καὶ πῶς οἶγε λιμώττουσι καὶ νοσοῦσι· καὶ τὸ πλείον. αὐτῶν ἀπόλλυται μέρος ὑπὸ τῶν ἀέρων, ἢ τῶν πολεμίων.

Versus sunt veteris cujusdam Comici, ex fa-bula ante Lysandri victoriam scripta, quos citat Dion, ut fortunæ mutationes osten-dat. In primo delenda particula et legendum aut δίσκοιν' ἀπασῶν, aut, quod paullo melius videtur, δίσκοινα πόλειν, πότιν' Ἀθη-ναίων πόλις. In secundo recte, opinor, Valc-

Valckenærius*, ὡς δὴ καλόν σου φ. τ. ς. In tertio supplendo, utpote quem ipse Dion imperfectum reliquerit, nemo adhuc vires suas expertus est. In quarto γίη coniecit Valesius, γύη Valckenærius†, neuter recte. Sed egregie mox Valckenærius, εἶχε μὲν, θηιωθεῖσα δὲ, ὡς ἰ. σ. α. bene etiam, καὶ τούρανου γ', ὡς φασιν, ἰ. ἰ. κ. Sciendum est enim non raro ita curvari in scribendo literam ι, ut prope ad figuram του̃ c accedat. Ne longe abeam. Supra Orat. xxiii. p. 397. pro eo quod edidit Morellus, ἄσθ' ὄλος λοιδορεῖν ἱκανός, recte Viri docti, ἄσθ' ὁ λοιδορεῖν ἰ. sed errat Reiskius, cum Venetam et Morellianam consentire ait. Veneta enim habet, ἄσθ' ὄλος δορεῖν. Sed quid, inquires, isto γυνή faciemus? In locum suum reponemus, et fugitivam vocem, quæ hinc excidit, retrahemus *ἄλση δὲ τίς πω τοιάδ' ἔσχ' ἄλλη πόλις; εἶχε μὲν θηιωθεῖσα δὲ, ὡς ἐπὶ συμφοραῖς, *ἀπε- γυνή κείρατο. καὶ τούρανου γ' ὡς φασιν κ. τ. λ.
Exciderat vox, γυνή, quod librarius cum animadvertet, margini notam adscripsit, qua monere voluit, in textu reponendam post συμφοραῖς; sed signis fortasse parum distincte positus deceptus alter, non pro additamento, sed pro emendatione accepit. Delevit igitur πόλις et γυνή inseruit.

Jam videamus, quomodo sese ex emendationibus, cum nostris, tum alienis, totus locus habeat.

Δέσποινα πόλειον, πότνι ἀθηναίων πόλις·
 μὴ λέγε, ἄνθρωπε, οὐκέτι εἰσὶν ἐκεῖνοι δεσπότες.
 ὡς δὴ καλὸν σου φαίνεται τὸ νεώριον· ἀλλὰ μὲθ' ἐλλήσποντον καὶ λῦσανδρον αἰσχρόν· καλὸς γ' ὁ παρθενίων· καλὸς δ' ὁ παραιεύς· ἔτι δὲ μετὰ τῶν τειχῶν αὐτὸν βλέπεις.
 ἄλση δὲ τίς πω τοιάδ' ἔσχ' ἄλλη πόλις;
 ἔιχε μὲν, διαθεῖσα δὲ, ὡς ἐπὶ συμφοραῖς γυνή, ἀπεκείρατο.
 καὶ τοῦρανοῦ γ', ὡς φασὶν, ἐστὶν ἐν καλῶι· καὶ πᾶς, οἷγε λιμῶντουσι καὶ νοσοῦσι, καὶ τὸ πλεον αὐτῶν πολεμίων,
 ἀπόλλυται μέρος ὑπὸ τῶν ἀέρων ἢ τῶν τόπων;

Hic liber olim Gulielmi Sancroft, Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis, a Thoma Galeo, sed valde negligenter, longe diligentius
in

in usum editionis Wesselingianæ ab Antonio Askew collatus est, ut tamen non pauca omiserit, quædam etiam minus recte notaverit. Quod in omni fere collatione fit, præsertim in ea, ubi magna variarum lectionum pars ad dialecti rationem vel servatam vel neglectam pertinet. Quid mirum igitur, si dativum Ionicum μήνεσιν ex Arch., ut vocatur, nostro IV. 43. (hujus MS. pag. marg. 258.) enotavit, eundem VIII. 51. (p. m. 478.) non enotavit? Aliam leviculam Askewii omissionem exempli gratia notabo. In Herodoto IV. 94. ita notantur variæ lectiones in ed. Wess., cum antea Ζάμολξιν legeretur: “Ζάλμοξιν. Arch. V. Vall. ora Steph. Pass. Ζάλμοξιν Med. Ask.” Sed hæc nota sibi contradicit. Lege Σάλμοξιν Med. Ask. Hoc vitium, in erratis sublatum, retinuit Borheckius. Quod de ora Steph. ait Wesselingius, verum est de Græco-Latina Stephani editione, non de Græca; ubi est Σάλμοξιν, quod etiam habet Arch. in margine (p. m. 254.)

254.) Totam igitur notam sic refinge : “ Σάλμοξιν Arch. V. Vall. Pass. Σάλμοξιν Arch. in marg. Med. Ask. ora Steph.” Dignus certe hic codex, qui, si iterum edetur Herodotus, paullo accuratius ite-rum examinetur. Numerus marginalis paginam indicat editionis Genevensis 1618.

AD THUCYDIDEM.

Lib.

I. 1. ἀδύνατα—two MSS. in our Public Library
 read so: though, as one of them is Hudson’s Clar., it may be already noted in his edition, which at present I have not by me.
 [Conf. R.P. ad Xen. Anab. p. 237. l. 5. ed.
 Cantab. Valck. ad Herodot. III. 61. ad
 Hipp. 370. Ἄδύνατα εἶναι ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀδύ-νατον· πολλάκις γὰρ κέχρηται Θουκυδίδης τοῖς πληθυντικοῖς ἀντὶ ἐνίκων, μάλιστα δὲ ἐπὶ ταύτης τῆς λέξεως. Lex. Seguerian. p. 342].

In

In MS. marked Nn. 3. 18. in the Public Library, Cambridge, and the same as Hudson's Clar., is a curious reading, VIII. 93. Οἱ δ' ἐν τῷ

πειραιεῖ ὀπλῖται τὸν τε ἀλεξιπλῆα ὄν ξυνέλαβον ἀφέντες, καὶ τὸ τείχισμα καθελόντες, ἐς τὸ πρὸς τῆ μουνηχία διονυσιακὸν * θέατρον * ἐὶ ἐν τῷ πειραιεῖ.
ἐλθόντες, καὶ θέμενοι τὰ ὄπλα, ἐξεκκλησίασαν. καὶ δόξαν αὐτοῖς, εὐθύς ἐχώρουν ἐς τὸ ἄστυ.

It is no objection to this reading, that it is in the margin; for all the marginal readings are added on a revisal by the same hand from a collation of other MSS. [Διονυσιακὸν τὸ ἐν τῷ Πειραιεῖ θέατρον Cass.]

“It abounds, says Academicus, with absurdities. So does almost every ancient MS. A MS. may be, upon the whole, of great authority, and yet have many absurd readings. The greatest fault of our MS. is, that it is also full of interpolations. Yet even these are often curious, as they are supposed to be taken from apocryphal gospels. Another mistake your correspondent has copied from Wetstein (who though an excellent collator of Greek, knew little of Latin MSS.) that Beza’s MS. follows a strange and uncouth system of orthography. But his examples will scarcely make good his assertion. The words *temptatio, quotiens, thensaurus, intellego, are scriptions: thensaurus is in Faernus's edition of Terence, without doubt from the Codex Bembinus, the oldest MS. extant. I am persuaded that the other peculiarities mentioned by Wetstein would be found, upon examination, to stand upon equal authority. The truth is, Wetstein was rather prejudiced against this MS. Mr. Griesbach, who is more candid, says (Symbol. Crit. p. cxvii.) that it has a great quantity of very ancient and good readings. [Doctor Kipling's edition of the text of this noble fragment exceeds Doctor Woide's impression of that part of the Alexandrian MS. containing the N. T. in splendor and in accuracy.]

CODEX RESCRIPTUS, No. 1905.

[The CODEX RESCRIPTUS, of which Dr. Bentley speaks so highly in his letter to Archbp. Wake, p. 230,* was greatly esteemed by R. P. If his wishes to revisit Paris during the hollow truce in 1802 had been gratified; on that joyful occasion, he assured me, it would be the first MS. that he should inspect, and that the Anti-Atticista (which has lately been printed by the laudable zeal of Emanuel Bekker) would be the next. It may be collected from internal evidence that the former was written before the fourth century. On the demise of a venerable character in the Church, the event was sometimes registered in the margin of those august monuments of the Christian faith. The departure of a Patriarch of Alexandria, the Blessed Thomas or Timothy (I speak from memory), towards the close of the third century, is recorded in the margin of this MS.

* See also Blanchini Evang. Quadr. CDXCIX—DI.

“The

gent proofs of sameness.—It is equally true that R. P. did not approve the application of Dr. Marsh's theorem to determine the identity of MSS. by a coincidence in their readings: and Dr. Milner, in his Strictures, p. 252. has expressed in substance R. P.'s sentiments on this point; “the mathematical theorem, he signified, was totally inapplicable to the purpose. A multitude of considerations, he said, were necessary to form a correct judgment on MSS. which could not possibly be reduced to any theoretical computation of that kind.”—I have repeatedly attempted to elicit his opinion concerning Dr. Marsh's general Hypothesis touching the origin of the three Gospels. He was uniformly an unbeliever in it. R. P. accounted for the verbal coincidences very differently.—

I consulted R. P. three or four different times, about that principle of scriptural interpretation, as an universal property of the Greek language, which the late pious

pious and humane Granville Sharp first steadily applied to certain texts as additional testimonies to that fundamental doctrine—the Divinity of our Saviour: R. P. was silent. I can, however, state from very good authority that in conversation with certain friends R. P. intimated his distrust of the canon, and assigned reasons for his apprehensions, which appeared decisive to competent judges. At this time a pamphlet appeared, which was entitled Six more Letters to Granville Sharp, and written in the spirit of certain tracts which had been published about the close of the seventeenth century. The author of it makes irreverent sport truly, but is exceedingly shy of the main question. This effusion was attributed to R. P., who did not feel disposed to thank his friends for the compliment.]

Epilogue to the Satires, II. 171. p. 336.
Vol. IV. ed. Warton.] One would hardly suspect that the property of “This filthy simile, this beastly line,” may be contested. This, however, has been the case, as appears by the following faithful extract from Mist's Journal, Saturday, Feb. 18, 1721. p. 694. “On Tuesday-Night last at the Theatre in Drury-Lane, | was acted a Comedy, called called the Refusal, or the Ladies' | Philosophy, which was stolen from a Comedy lately acted | in Lincoln's Inn Fields, called No Fools like Wits, which was | stolen from a Comedy called the Female Virtuoso's, which | was stolen from a Comedy of Moliere, called Les Femmes Sçavantes. Such Authors as this Mr. D——s says are fed | like hogs in Westphalia, one is tied to the tail of another, | and the last feeds only upon the excrements of the rest, | and therefore is generally when full grown, no bigger than | a Pig."—Pope was a diligent reader of Mist's Journal; witness his Quotations from that Journal of June 22, 1718, and May 8, 1728, in the Testimonies of Authors prefixed to the Dunciad, Vol. v. p. 37, 38. Now if D——s means, as it probably does mean, the redoubted John Dennis, it is rather curious that Pope should be indebted for so singular an idea to his old friend or foe. The number 1718 is, I believe, a false print for 1728, as it stands in the folio

folio edition, Proleg. p. 75, printed in or about 1735. [L.I.]

[“Our modern authors write Plays as they feed Hogs in Westphalia; where but one eats Pease or Acorns, and all the rest feed upon his and one another's Excrements.—So the Spaniard first invents and designs Plays; the French borrow from them, and the English from the French.” Butler's Remains, Vol. II. pp. 496, 7. The Editor suspects that Mr. Pope had seen either Butler's “manuscripts, or had taken a Hint from some Conversation with Bishop Atterbury, who had been favoured by Mr. Longueville with an inspection of them.” And Warburton seems to have countenanced this suspicion; see W.'s Lett. to Hurd, p. 288.]

Written on the fly-leaf of a Copy of the “Tracts by Warburton and a Warburtonian.”

N.B. These two Tracts by Warburton, Miscellaneous Translations and Critical Enquiry, quiry, complete the edition of Bp. W.'s Works published by Bp. Hurd. [L.I.] [Warburton's Specimen* of a new edition of Velleius Paterculus appeared in Bibl. Britannique, T. VII. 264.—“which,” adds his late biographer, “was then communicated to his friend Dr. Middleton; who advised him very properly to drop the design, ‘as not worthy of his talents and industry,’ “which,” he says, “instead of trifling on words, seems calculated rather to correct the opinions and manners of the world.” If it be allowed that words, “to all moral purposes,” are equivalent to deeds, it will hardly be contested that they have considerable influence on the sentiments and habits of mankind. If verbal criticism “embrace the whole circle of human knowledge,” it cannot be contemptible;—and if it be calculated to give a proper bias to cultivated understandings, it might have conduced to tutor W.'s "voracious appetite for knowledge," and to produce a better "digestion*." The unworthy antagonist of Bentley, however, had no predilection for an exercise, by which the native vigour of W.'s genius would have been trained and disciplined, and from which his friend and director might have profited greatly †. In his two pamphlets, from which Dr. Bentley's Proposals for printing a new Edition of the Greek Testament and St. Hierom's Latin Version "received a great shock in the eye of the world ‡," Dr. Middleton was assisted by the learned Dr. Ashton, then Master of Jesus-College, Cambridge. Indeed, our matchless Critic might, with justice, have retorted

† "I ought to caution you against trusting to the translations of Middleton: they are all vile, and many of them unfaithful." Mr. Fox to Trotter, vol. ii. p. 492. Perhaps the memory of Dr. M.'s friend alone is concerned in this well-founded assertion.

upon his disingenuous adversary the sweeping assertion—that he published “other men’s labours, and reserved the whole reputation of them to himself*.”—It may appear a little extraordinary that Dr. M., who was at that time sinking to a degree of scepticism wholly inconsistent with revealed religion, should all at once start up, and with a grave countenance advocate the text of R. Stephens; but “the musical Conyers” was a designation which could not be pardoned; it must be resented at any rate: si non nocuisset, mortuus esset.—Another facetious friend of Dr. Bentley, Mr. Pope,

* I proceed not to higher matter at present. See the able, but lenient, sentence passed upon another work [Life of Cicero] by an illustrious scholar, who knows when to doubt, and when to decide; PRÆF. ad Bellenden. pp. iii, iv.—The following lines are affixed as a motto to a pamphlet published in 1719, and purporting to be an answer to Mr. Miller; it was probably drawn up under Dr. Bentley’s inspection; at least, he was occasionally consulted:

The Editor has with singular good faith suppressed above seven hundred of Dryden's verses, to wit, the twenty-seventh idyllium of Theocritus with the translations from the third and fourth books of Lucretius. If the indecency of some passages was the cause of their suppression, why were not the verses against the love of life and the fear of death retained? Dr. Anderson has also omitted near two octavo pages of preface; but to be consistent, he should have cancelled the paragraph, in which mention is made of that part of the third book. However, to make Dryden some amends for depriving him of his own, he has given him two poems that are not his; Tarquin and Tullia, and Suum Cuique. Suum Cuique was written by some stanch Jacobite, but I know not whom; Tarquin and Tullia was written by Arthur Mainwaring, who afterwards turned Whig, and expiated his youthful heresy in the Medley. HAWKINS V. JOHNSON. 442.

Mr. URBAN,

Aug. 3.

HAVE you read that divine book, the “Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D. by Sir John Hawkins, Knt.?” Have you done any thing but read it since it was first published? For my own part, I scruple not to declare, that I could not rest till I had read it quite through, notes, digressions, index, and all;—then I could not rest till I had gone over it a second time. I begin to think that increase of appetite grows by what it feeds on*; for I have been reading it ever since. I am now in the midst of the sixteenth perusal; and still I discover new beauties. I can think of nothing else ; I can talk of nothing else. In short, *my mind is become tumid, and longs to be delivered of those many and great conceptions with which it has laboured since I have been through a course of this most perfect exemplar of biography. The compass of learning, the extent and accuracy of information, the judicious criticisms, the moral reflections, the various opinions, legal and political, to say nothing of that excess of candour and charity that breathe throughout the work, make together such a collection of sweets, that the sense aches † at them. To crown all, the language is refined to a degree of immaculate purity, and displays the whole force of turgid eloquence †. Johnson, to be sure, was thought for a while to have a knack at life-writing ; but who, in his senses, would compare him to our Knight ? Sir Thomas Urquhart, in the account of Crichton, (which the Knight has given us, 304. because it is so intimately connected with Johnson's life,) hondersponders it pretty well ; but even he must yield the palm.

Read Hawkins once, and you can read no more,
For all books else appear so mean, so poor ;
Johnson's a dunce ; but still persist to read,
And Hawkins will be all the books you need §.

§ [Altered from a passage in the Duke of Buckingham's Essay on Poetry.]

Sir

Sir John has, in his own person, verified a reflection of Johnson's upon that charming writer Sir Richard Blackmore (and he too was knight and bookmaker), "He wrote on as he had written before, and neither turned aside to soften his critics by civility, nor repress them by confutation." See also what our biographer says to the same purpose, but in terms much more elegant, 349. Now observe, Mr. Urban, how exactly this has been Sir John's case. The witlings and critics of the day combined to run down that excellent book the "History of Music," in five volumes quarto; and their malice prevailed so effectually, for some time, that people who had any regard for their reputation were ashamed to have the book, or to know any thing about it. But Sir John was steady to his resolution; he wrote on as he had written before; and presented the publick with this last best gift*, which not only sells itself, but is the cause of selling the Knight's other works. How was my heart dilated, as my friends can testify it was, with the news of this Life being translated into the Russian language†! I am credibly informed, that since the publication of this Life, a copy of the "History of Music" has risen, first from half a guinea to twelve and six pence, next to fifteen shillings, nay, that even a guinea has been paid for a set handsomely bound in morocco. So that the bookseller, instead of losing two hundred and fifty pounds, is likely to lose not above two hundred and thirty, or two hundred and forty, at most.—I beg pardon, Mr. Urban, for this rapture. But I cannot govern my imagination, whenever I think or speak of that great man. However, as I disapprove of general criticism, I will try to check my enthusiasm, and point out some few of the numberless beauties that shine through this inimitable performance. Of the Knight's learning, which some prophane critics have been hardy enough to question, no Zoilus will dare to doubt in future, when he learns, from the Life of Johnson, 4. that struma signifies the king's evil; and, from a long Latin note, that other people have been afflicted with it besides the Doctor. But the passages quoted from Latin authors are numerous, though, it must be owned, very happily applied, 19. from Erasmus's Colloquies, to prove that dutiful children wait upon their parents: 312. from Archbp. Peccham; 347. a new quotation from Ovid.; 470. we are informed to our unspeakable comfort, that to oppose means to put questions; and this is cleared up beyond a doubt by seven lines from Ingulphus*. 505. 581. Next come Magna Charta and Justinian's Institutes. Of Magna Charta Sir John has the same opinion with that loyal subject Oliver Cromwell, whose poetry on the occasion is well known. But the Knight, as his manner is, has greatly improved upon Old Noll's language. Besides these damning proofs, the work abounds in such flowers as these: Temp. Car. I. Temp. Car. II. Dictamen. Verbatim et literatim. Sui generis. Notanda. Vide supra in not. Ex relatione PETER Flood. Exemplars. Quoad the person. Evidentia rei. Ex cathe-

* Some people may enviously suggest, that for this citation the Knight is indebted to his most dutiful son and squire, in whose Life of Ruggle, p. lviii. it occurs; but I cannot see what they would get by it, if the fact were allowed. Is it not all in the family? and with whom can a man make free, if not with his relations?

dra. Testamentary dispositions in extremis. Inops consilii.
I should be glad, after this, to see the wretch that will dispute Sir John's Latin. As for his Greek, the proofs are not indeed so many, but equally strong.

And when one's proofs are aptly chosen,
Three are as valid as three dozen*.

318. 562. myops or near-sighted persons. Seized with a paralysis. 461. Νύξ γὰρ ἐγγύρα. The meaning is (says Sir John) For the night cometh. And so it is, Mr. Urban. I should now go on to the other beauties of this book, but I am distracted with the variety of subjects that call for notice, and consequently for admiration. One particular I must mention. Whoever buys this Life, buys the pith and marrow of Johnson at the same time; for the Knight has, with great art, inserted in his work the substance of the ten volumes. I cannot but laugh when I think what simpletons the booksellers are to sell the Life separately from the Works. Do they expect that any body will buy, at a great price, in ten volumes, what he may have so much cheaper in one? Never was a king in Christendom better bit than they are. I shall take my leave at present; but next month, if you have room to spare, I shall resume the pleasing task of criticising this delightful book. I shall display its beauties; I shall vindicate it from the objections of the envious and ignorant; for such there are; and you, Mr. Urban, I fear, have not done justice to the Knight's merit. Lastly, with all due deference, I shall beg leave to propose a few corrections and amendments. It is doubtless of the utmost importance to know what alterations have been made in the second edition; I shall therefore give the reader a collation of the principal passages where I have noted any variation. No apology needs surely to be made for descending to such seemingly minute particulars.—The different editions of so valuable a book have full as good a right to be collated as the MSS. of a musty old classic, the editions of Shakespeare, or even of Ignoramus itself. In a statue from the hand of Phidias, I would not, if I could help it, have a single toe-nail amiss*. And, since the smallest speck is seen on snow†; I am persuaded that the Knight himself will not be displeas'd with a freedom which proceeds solely from esteem.

MR. URBAN,

Sept. 17.

The Greek*, an Oxford scholar of my acquaintance informs me, is the motto to the Variorum Shakespeare. This FORCIBLE AND JUST EXPRESSION is vastly like what Garrick says in Sir John's excellent book, 443. Shakespeare, when he sat down to write, dipped his pen into his own heart. Might we not say of the Knight with equal force and justice, "that he is the clerk of biography, dipping his pen into the Statutes at large?" Since I had the pleasure of writing to you, Mr. Urban, I have been listening to the opinions of your readers on the subject of my letter, and I find that the greater part of them treat it with ridicule or neglect. The supercilious lip of scorn protruded itself, 564. But I have at the same time received the flattering news that Sir John himself (satis est EQUITEM mihi plaudere†) is highly pleased with my well-meant, though humble attempts, to illustrate and vindicate his writings; attempts, let me tell you, by no means needless; for in these licentious times, when the very schoolboys take a pride to gird at their elders and betters. I protest what I am going to relate is an absolute fact. Soon after the publication of Sir John's book, a parcel of Eton boys, not having the fear of God before their eyes, &c. instead of playing truant, robbing orchards, annoying poultry, or performing any other part of their school exercise, fell foul in print§ upon his Worship's censure of Addison's middling style, and even sneered at the story of the Quaker, which I hold to be as good a thing as any in the volume. But what can you expect, as Lord Kaimes justly observes, from a school where boys are taught to rob on the highway? In my last, I promised you a collation of the two editions of Sir John's work; but this I shall at present defer, and only give you my remarks on a variation of which you have already taken notice in your Magazine for June, p. 522.

In this age, which is so sharp-sighted in detecting forgery, I may perhaps be carried away by the prevailing rage; but I cannot help thinking, that the whole addition in pages 585-6 is spurious, and did not proceed from the pen of Sir John Hawkins. The Knight's style is clear and elegant; this account, cloudy, inconsistent, and embarrassed. But I shall content myself with asking a few queries upon this important paragraph.

Qu. I. Would a writer, confessedly so exact in his choice of words as the Knight, talk in this manner: While he was preparing—an accident happened—? As if one should 752 say of that unfortunate divine*, Dr. Dodd, an accident proved fatal to him; he happened to write another man's name, &c.

Qu. II. Would not Sir John have told us the name of the person who is so darkly described in this narration? He is not usually backward in mentioning people's names at full length, where any thing is to be said to their credit.

Qu. III. Would he not have told us something more about the important paper of a public nature, which he missed after receiving a visit from Mr. Anonymous; or would

attempt a translation for the benefit of your mere English readers: *There is more joy over a sinner that repenteth than over a just person that needeth no repentance. And we know, from an authority not to be disputed, that Johnson was a great lover of penitents. Life, p. 406.

God put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou might'st win the more thy [Johnson's] love,
Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.

2 Hen. IV. [p. 95. ed. pr. repr.]

Having, I flatter myself, fairly got rid of this interpolation, I shall venture to hint my sentiments upon a contrary fault, an omission. In the Life, p. 460, 461, we have an ample description of a watch that Johnson bought for seventeen guineas; but, just as we expect some important consequence from this solemn introduction, the history breaks off, and suddenly opens another subject. Now, Mr. Urban, some days ago I picked up a printed octavo leaf, seemingly cancelled and rejected. It was so covered with mud and dirt, that I could only make out part of it, which I here send you, submitting it to better judgement, whether this did not originally fill the chasm that every reader of taste and feeling must at once perceive in the history of the watch. It is more difficult to find a reason why it was omitted. But I am persuaded that the person, who is the object of Sir John's satire, was so hurt at the home truths contained in it, that he tampered with the printers to have it suppressed.

FRAGMENT.

* * * * * "And here, touching this watch already by me mentioned, I insert a notable instance of the craft and selfishness of the Doctor's Negro servant. A few days after that whereon Dr. Johnson died, this artful fellow came to me, and surrendered the watch, saying at the same time, that his master had delivered it to him a day or two before his demise, with such demeanour and gestures, that he did verily believe that it was his intention that he, namely Frank, should keep the same. Myself knowing that no sort of credit was due to a black domestic and favourite servant, and withal considering that the wearing thereof would be more proper for myself, and that I had got nothing by my trust of executor save sundry old books, and coach-hire for journeys during the discharge of the said office; and further reflecting on what I have occasion elsewhere to mention, viz. that, since the abolishing general warrants, temp. Geo. III. no good articles in this branch can be had any longer in England, I took the watch from him, intending to have it appraised by my own jeweller, a very honest and expert artificer, and, in so doing, to have bought it as cheap as I could for myself, let it cost what it would. Upon my signifying this my intention to Frank, the impudent Negro said, 'he plainly saw there was no good intended for him;' and in anger left* me. 753 He then posted to my colleagues the other executors; and there being in the people of this country a general propensity to humanity, notwithstanding all my exertions to counteract the same both in writing* and otherwise; this being the case, I say, he had found means to prepossess them so entirely in his favour, that they snubbed me, and insisted with me that I should make restitution. Finally,

though perhaps I should not have been amenable to any known judicature by keeping the watch, I consented, being compelled thereto, to let this worthless fellow retain that testimony of his master's ill-directed benevolence in extremis." * * * *

You perceive, Mr. Urban, that in these remarks I have been content humbly to imitate the Knight. He has, to the eternal honour of true criticism, thrown out some interpolations, and recovered some additional passages in his edition of Johnson's Works. Of the first sort is the concluding sentence of the Preface to Shakespeare, which Sir John, purely by his own judgement and sagacity, saw was spurious, and had been inserted, without Dr. Johnson's consent or knowledge, in order to pay one Steevens a compliment. This being, as doubtless it was, Sir John's opinion, I cannot see why his enemies should cry out so loudly upon this falsification, as they call it. They say that Sir John, in order to give some colour to this fraudulent omission, pretends to print from the first edition, which wants this paragraph; though at the same time he follows the last editions throughout the rest of the Preface. They say, besides, that personal quarrel and private spleen—but what signifies it what such fellows say? In the other part of criticism Sir John is equally eminent. He has restored to Johnson what a less acute critic never would have restored; the Apotheosis of Milton and the Review of Burke. And here again come those impudent wits, and tell us, with a sneer, that these were not written by Johnson, but one by Guthrie and the other by Mr. Murphy. I am told, indeed, that Mr. Murphy has owned the Review of Burke

to be his. But I must beg his pardon for acquiescing in the decision of the Knight, rather than in Mr. Murphy's assertion.

Dares he think his bare word so proper to decide as tences ?

tences? These points being granted, it follows, that whenever Sir John Hawkins, in quoting any part of Johnson's Works, adopts a reading different from the editions, it is to be replaced in the text, and the other discarded. Now to apply. We read in the vulgar editions of London, vol. xi. p. 319. "And fix'd on Cambria's solitary shore." But how much better is Sir John's reading (56) ! "And fix'd in Cambria's solitary shore." I would not believe that Johnson wrote otherwise, though Johnson himself should affirm it. Again, in the last number of The Rambler, vol. vii. p. 395. Johnson says, or is made to say, "I have endeavoured to refine our language to grammatical purity." How tame, dull, flat, lifeless, insipid, prosaic, &c. is this, compared to what the Knight has substituted (291)—grammar and purity ! A fine instance of the figure Hen dia duoin ! like Virgil's *pateris et auro; or like—but I will not overpower you with my learning; or, more properly speaking, with my lettered ignorance; for that is the statutable phrase, and so it ought to have been printed in the verses on Levett, vol. xi. p. 366. upon the authority of the Knight (555), instead of lettered arrogance: Lettered ignorance is a beautiful oxymoron, and hints that people who affect to be men of learning, may be very ignorant notwithstanding. Examples, I suppose, will occur to every reader. Here I cannot help hazarding, though somewhat out of its place, a conjecture of my own upon a passage in Sir John's work (311), "Among men of real learning there is but 848 one opinion—" Ought it not to be, "Among *us men of real learning"—? In the same Rambler, Johnson says, "On this part of my work I look back with pleasure, which no blame or praise of man shall diminish or augment." Here the Knight has excelled himself. He has made an emendation hardly inferior to some of Warburton's upon Shakespeare, and, by throwing out two idle words, has restored the sentence to its original vigour—"no praise of man shall diminish or augment." From this passage, thus corrected, we learn that praise, when bestowed by some people, is a disgrace; a truth which the world never thoroughly perceived before some executors of their friend's fame appeared. Critics in a dead language, when they dislike the common text, quarrel with the careless or faithless transcribers. My spleen is not less moved by those negligent, or worse than negligent, rogues, the printers; who have given us, in the preface to Johnson's Dictionary, vol. ix. p. 221. the following paragraph: "—In gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable, that in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified." Now would you believe, Mr. Urban, that not a word of this is genuine? No. The true reading, or nearly the true reading (for the Knight (344) has not favoured us with the exact words) runs thus: "So near perfection have I brought this Dictionary, that, upon a review of it, previous to my drawing up the preface, I am unable to detect the casual omission of more than one article, the appellative OCEAN." You, I dare say, Mr. Urban, and many others, had no more wit than to imagine that Johnson was rather confessing his weakness than exulting in his strength; that he meant to show how the most common things may escape our notice, and therefore says, "In reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified."

See,

See, Sir, how grievously you were mistaken. Johnson, in the sentence we have retrieved, boasts of the perfection to which he has brought his work, in the modest style of Exegi monumentum—: and it was not the word SEA un-exemplified that made the single fault, but the appellative OCEAN omitted.

The next part of my task I would gladly decline, of proposing some corrections in Sir John's work. I shudder at my own rashness; but, since I have begun, it is too late to retreat. P. 384, "I once travelled with Richardson in the Fulham stage-coach." Tell me the truth, Mr. Urban, is there not something in this sentence that grates upon your round and religious ears? If the date of the fact were settled, I should pronounce at once, that Sir John wrote, "My own coach being out of order, I once travelled"—A like omission has happened (419), "I retired and staid in the outer room to take him home." Read boldly, "to take him home in my own coach." Whoever is well acquainted with the Knight's writings, knows that he never misses an opportunity of using the pronoun of the first person. It was on this ground I offered my first conjecture. Thus we find, from the beginning of the volume to the end, not only MY own coach, but also, MY servants. MY servant. MY lands. MY country-house. MY gate in the country. MY gardener. While I was chairman. Intelligence in MY judicial capacity. Kelly practised under ME. A bill found before ME. I have discharged debtors [i. e. as judge, not as creditor]. MY discourse with Lord Rochford. MY conversation with a nobleman. Bishop Hoadley himself told ME [what he had told all the world before]. Sir John (386) has given a list of the books

in ana, but has forgotten one of the most famous, called Jomilleriana. This is the more extraordinary, because he is indebted to it for two of his best stories in pages 192 and 348; and the Knight is a man of such nice honour, that he never borrows from an author without acknowledging the obligation. Witness Mr. Boswell, Mrs. Piozzi, the Gentleman's and European Magazines, &c.

Did I tell you, Mr. Urban, that Sir John has a delicate hand at a compliment? If I told you so, I told you nothing but the truth. Out of fifty proofs I shall produce two. P. 211, Dr. Hill obtained from one of those universities (St. Andrew's), which would scarce refuse a degree to an apothecary's horse, a diploma*. The civil things that Johnson said of Scotland were highly grateful and honourable to the natives, or Mr. Boswell would not have recorded them. But, in my mind, the Knight is far superior to his model both in sentiment and language. By the way, I marvel* that Sir John, upon mentioning Dr. Hill's knight-849hood, did not add some remarks upon the prostitution of this honour†, and lament that it is so often conferred on the most worthless of mankind. Our present excellent Laureat informed His Majesty, that there was no true glory in the American war‡ (which I fully believe). The lines were loyal and poetical; but they show no better than a gilt two-pence when placed by the side of our Knight's compliment. Speaking of Dr. Dodd (521), he says, that he was not an object of THAT CLEMENCY WHICH HIS MAJESTY IS EVER READY TO EXERT IN FAVOUR OF THOSE WHO HAVE THE LEAST CLAIM TO IT.

I was luckily within hearing when Sir John, upon reading my second letter, employed that forcible and just expression which I have chosen for my motto. Every word that issues from those lips is as precious to me as if it proceeded from Dodona's oak, or any other oracular timber; I therefore bade Jackey set it down; my son, Mr. Urban, a dutiful and ingenious lad. He is scarcely turned of five-and-twenty, and has already published Tom Thumb with copious Prolegomena, notes, and a glossary, accurante Johanne Sundreio Whereof Arm. The saying, however, is not quite true, unless it be taken cum grano salis (the meaning whereof is, with a grain of salt). For it seems at first sight to signify, that whoever defends his own character, completely ruins it; which is contrary to fact and experience. Indeed, if we allowed the additions in the second impression of Johnson's Life (particularly in p. 585-6) to be Sir John's own, two awkward consequences would follow. That however dead to shame, or callous to reproof, some men pretend to be, they have feeling enough to be hurt at whispers against their moral character*, and imprudence enough to make matters worse by attempting to vindicate themselves. A base action is a disorder of *the mind; and, next to the folly of doing it, is the folly that defends it. I had long admired the specimens of Sir John's critical talents, and was resolved, so far as my slender abilities would permit me, to follow his example.

Quod te imitari, aveo †:

And, I hope, I proved in my last that the story of conveying the book was an impudent forgery, contrived by the Knight's foes to make him seem to bear witness against himself. We must, therefore, seek another interpretation of the hereinbeforementioned apophthegm. The true sense I take to be this, That a man's case is indeed desperate when, having no advocate to undertake his defence, he is obliged to step forward in person to defend himself. But Sir John's merit is such, that it animates even strangers to plead his cause. Though I trust there are within the realm five hundred as good friends † of Sir John, and abler defenders than I am, yet I cannot help being a little vain, when I reflect, that while the publick was passing its censures on the Knight with the utmost freedom, and wondering how he could have the front to traduce himself in print, I alone had the courage to step forward the champion of a person whom, I am in doubt, whether I value more as an amiable man or a sprightly writer. Nor has my vanity only been gratified. Sir John has just sent me a second-hand copy, almost as good as new, of Walton's Complete Angler, ed. opt. 1784. SWIFT.

To the Rev. Mr. TRAVIS.

SIR,

I AM not ill-satisfied with the opinion of my letters which you have adopted from your friend Kuster. I expected no better sentence from such ignorant and corrupt judges. It was likewise a brilliant thought of Kuster, to urge me with the authority of a book, for which I have always entertained

tained and avowed the profoundest contempt. He quotes a passage from your work, which, he says, he cannot help believing. I cannot help his belief, nor my own disbelief. For I am infidel enough to think, notwithstanding what he says, that he has not read my letters either with great attention, or with any attention at all. Else he must have seen, that, far from making Stephens a cheat, I expressly disclaim the supposition. I accuse him of nothing but inaccuracy and typographical error. I say that he restored the MSS., which he had borrowed from the King's library, as became an honest man and a grateful subject. While you maintain, that he never restored them, but carried them off to Geneva, and lent them to Beza; and this in spite of Stephens's own evidence to the contrary; in spite of his advertisement at the end of Beza's first edition. "The MSS. cited in the notes are all those which are extant in the King of France's library." This advertisement you, indeed, p. 130, interpret with your usual knowledge and dexterity. You make it signify, that Stephens lent those very MSS. to Beza. In that case, Stephens ought to have said: "The MSS. cited in the notes are those which were extant in the King of France's library, till I stole them for the service of my pious friend Beza." Which brings the worse charge against Stephens; I, who

* [he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, hee was in the minde it was: this is called the retort courteous. If I sent him word againe, it was not well cut, he would send me word he cut it to please himself: this is called the quip modest. If againe, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called the reply churlish. If againe, it was not well cut, he would answer I spake not true: this is called the reprooffe valiant. only suppose him to have misplaced a semicircle by chance; or you, who suppose him to be first a thief, next a liar, and lastly impudent enough to publish his theft to the world? It is you, Sir, not I, that make Stephens a cheat. But you were determined to load me with the severest reproach you could invent; and, to insure success, you imputed your own principles to me. Or perhaps you defend Stephens's reputation from the attacks of others, merely to have the pleasure of murdering it yourself.

I come now to the immediate purpose of your letter. And here let me bestow praise where it is due. I congratulate you upon the more moderate style you have assumed. To me it is indifferent whether this be owing to my reproof, or to your own reflection. Whatever be the cause, I am equally well pleased with the effect. The flaming theologian, who so lately scorched us in the meridian, now sinks temperately to the West, and is hardly felt as he descends.*

The proof of the inaccuracy of Stephens's edition in this 129 place consists of two parts. 1. That it is morally impossible for the same editor to find seven MSS. of the N. T. all agreeing in a reading which is supported by no MS. whatever, Greek or Latin, that any other critic or editor has collated. 2. That †four of the very MSS. used by Stephens have since been found in the French King's library; that these omit not only the words ἐν τῶι οὐρανῶι, 1 John v. 7, but also to the words ἐν τῆι γῆι in the next verse, inclusive; and therefore that the semicircle in R. Stephens's edition ought to be transposed.

The

The second part of this proof you have thought fit to controvert; how justly we shall see presently. I will first endeavour to clear the question from that heap of rubbish, with which you have industriously encumbered it, and then to examine your objections.

1. Le Long says, that Stephens's N^o 4, is the King's MS. 2871. N^o 5, 3425.* N^o 7, 2242. N^o 10, 2870.* To which Wetstein adds, that Stephens's N^o 9 is now the Coislinian 200, and that N^o 15 is the King's MS. 2869. which, however, Stephens did not collate to the Catholic Epistles.

2. But according to you, "Le Long affirms, that there are only four of the royal MSS. containing the Catholic Epistles, and that these four were used by R. Stephens." If Le Long affirms this, he certainly had lost either his memory or his senses, or he was fond of lying for its own sake. For he had read Simon's Critical History, who quotes several of the King's MSS. different from these four. He had read a dissertation upon 1 John v. 7, lately published by Abbé L. Roger, who makes the same appeal. Why then should he tell a notorious as well as a needless lie? How would his opinion of four certain MSS. be helped by the poverty, or hurt by the wealth, of the library? But you have mistaken Le Long's words "Il n'y a que quatre MSS. du Roi, qui contiennent les Epistres Canoniques, δ, ε, ζ, ι, numérotés 2871, &c." Now, Sir, if he had meant, that only four of the MSS. then (1720) existing in the King's library, contained the Catholic Epistles, instead of δ, ε, ζ, ι, he would have said 2871, 3425, 2242, 2870. His real meaning, as is plain from the context, is, that, of the eight MSS. which Stephens borrowed from the royal library, only four contained the Catholic Epistles. Therefore, says Le Long, by what I found in the King's MSS. [used by Stephens], I determined what must have been in the copies that Stephens procured elsewhere.

3. "Wetstein," you proceed, "makes the whole number to be no less than eight; and says that five of them were formerly used by R. Stephens." If Wetstein made the number eight hundred, he would not contradict Le Long. Neither does he profess to have collated all the MSS. in the King's library. He only asserts that there are eight MSS. of the Catholic Epistles in the King's library; which, though I have no great opinion of your modesty, I hope you will not venture to deny.

4. "Mr. Griesbach contradicts both the former testimonies, and makes the number of MSS. nine, five of which he assigns to Stephens." To ripen these assertions into contradictions, you ought to produce an expression of this sort from Le Long, Wetstein, and Mr. Griesbach, severally:

"I have seen $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{four} \\ \text{eight} \\ \text{nine} \end{array} \right\}$ MSS. of the Catholic Epistles, and the library contains no more." The only place of Le Long which seems to say any thing like this, I have explained; and I defy you to point out any place in the others, that has the least tendency to such an assertion. You seem to have forgotten (if indeed you ever knew) two of the most common rules of criticism: Qui pauciora memorat, plura non negat; qui plura memorat, pauciora non negat. You might have given the lie to Wetstein and

Mr. Gries-

Mr. Griesbach, from their own words; for, on 1 John v. 7, they both quote two King's MSS. from Simon's authority, which are not included in their general list. But since you seem so tickled with this palmarian argument, I will improve it for you. "Le Long," you say, "makes the whole number of MSS. to be four, Wetstein eight, and Mr. Griesbach nine. Now, it is certain that the whole number of the French King's MSS. containing the Catholic Epistles is not less than twenty: therefore Le Long, Wetstein, and Mr. Griesbach, are liars, &c.; R. Stephens infallible; and 1 John v. 7. genuine.

5. You wisely suggest a doubt whether the Codex Hafniensis ought to be comprehended in Wetstein and Mr. Griesbach's number. At vel DUBITASSE, mi homo, tam 130 *insigne àxiologia; et imperitiæ specimen est, ut præterquam in tuo libro par nusquam viderim. You doubt whether the Codex Hafniensis Regius, a MS. in the royal library at Copenhagen, be a MS. in the royal library at Paris! Hoc serio quæquam dixisse, summa hominum contemptio est†.

6. "Le Long says, that No. 2878 is one of the MSS. used by Stephens, and contains the Catholic Epistles; which Wetstein and Mr. Griesbach both deny." For 2878, read 2870, and then see what you can make of your contradiction. If you had consulted the Journal des Savans, instead of Emlyn's Reply, you would have set Le Long at variance with himself, as well as with others. For he there makes Stephens's No. 10 the King's MS. 2870 in the body of his letter, but 2878 in the table subjoined. I wonder too, while your hand was in, that you did not find other contradictions in Le Long's account, partly to himself, as when he calls the same MS. 3445 in the body of his letter, and 3425 in the table; partly to Wetstein and Mr. Griesbach, as when he makes Stephens's No. 8 the King's MS. 2361, which they both make 2861. Have you sworn, Sir, to wage immortal war with slips of the pen and press? Or is it your resolution to exempt not only R. Stephens, but every other person, from the possibility of typographical error?

7. Flushed with this victory over the printer, you *sink deeper by floundering in the mud. "Le Long asserts, that the MS. in the royal library marked ss neither was used by Stephens, nor contained the Catholic Epistles, which they (Wetstein and Mr. Griesbach) both affirm." I am tired of confuting such ridiculous objections. There is no MS., Sir, in the royal library at Paris, marked ss, nor indeed with any of the Greek numerals by which R. Stephens distinguished his copies. All that Le Long asserts is, that he looked in the King's library for such of the MSS. as had been there from the time of Henry II.; that of these he found eleven, eight† of which eleven appeared upon examination to be the same that Stephens used in his edition. The table at the end of Le Long's letter is made by Le Long himself, partly from fact, and partly from conjecture. I had freely allowed that Le Long had committed some trifling errors; but I maintained, and still maintain,

* [Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.]

† But perhaps eight is a slip of the pen or press for six. Unaccountable blunders often happen in printing. Thus Mill. Prol. 1381, says novem instead of tres; as Bengelius rightly observes on Romans xii. 11.

that they do not affect the main point in debate. However, to cut off all pretence for chicanery, I will mention all the errors that I can detect in Le Long's account. He is mistaken, or at least incorrect, 1. in saying that he found the eight* royal MSS. which Stephens had borrowed, when in his table he specifies no more than six, Nos. 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 10. He is mistaken, 2. in saying that Simon quotes the words ἐν τῇ γῆ from a Colbertine MS.; for Simon quotes them from the King's MS. No. 2247. 3. In making No. 15 contain only seven Epistles, when it is plain, from Stephens's margin, that it contained also the Apocalypse. 4. In making No. 16 contain two Gospels, which contains only the Apocalypse.

8. Ἄλλων ἰατρῶς, αὐτὸς ἔλασι βρούαις* †. You have imputed an absurd assertion to Le Long in your book, p. 128, as if he had said, that all the fifteen MSS. used by Stephens were in the King's library, and were marked with the corresponding Greek numerals. If you are at liberty to fasten any nonsense upon an adversary, no doubt you can easily confute him.

9. You struggle hard to produce a contradiction about No. 7, but with better intentions than success.—I take the case to be this. The King's MS. No. 2242 was divided into two volumes, both marked with the same number. The first part contains the Gospels, the second the Acts and Epistles, excepting the three last Catholic Epistles. Le Long seems to have made his table not upon the spot, but after leaving the library, and to have supposed, from Stephens's margin, that his No. 7 did not contain the Acts. For Wetstein observes, that Stephens did not collate this MS. to the Acts. You affirm the contrary. I did expect, that a critick, so hot upon the scent for contradictions, would have found a fresh disagreement between Wetstein and Mr. Griesbach, who says of this same ζ, semel a Stephano citatur in Actis (xvii. 5.). Wetstein knew that it was once cited upon Acts, but he knew that it was 131 a mistake for No. 1, (the Comp. ed.). The objection that Wetstein's ζ contains less than Le Long's ζ, is too frivolous.—What three Epistles are these? Even those long voluminous compositions 2 and 3 John, and Jude. Wetstein's words are, continet Acta, Epistolas Canonicas, et Paulinas. If he had said, septem Epistolas Canonicas, it would have looked more like a contradiction. Yet even this might be forgiven, and charitably imputed to haste or forgetfulness, except by that mirror of accuracy Mr. Travis, who in critical morality is a perfect Stoic. *He knows not how to wink at human frailty, or pardon weakness that he never felt. But is this, Sir, the hard task imposed upon editors and collators, that their eye-sight, their memory, or their pen, must never mislead them? that no error of the press must escape them? Are they fools, liars, or cheats, whenever they fail? Your beloved Stephens then, and even another person whom you love better than Stephens, must take their share of the same reproaches. For Stephens often positively affirms (to use your favourite expression), that such a reading is found in his No. 1, when the Complutensian reading is quite different. So that, if Stephens had not told us that his No. 1 was the Complutensian edition, you could have proved, beyond con- tradiction,

* See note †, p. 358.

tradiction, that it was a different copy. At present I see no remedy to save Stephens from the imputation of lying. The other person, at whom I just now hinted, is the Author of some letters to Mr. Gibbon in defence of 1 John v. 7. In that matchless treatise, p. 295, it is positively affirmed, that Stephens's No. 16 contained the Acts. I positively affirm the contrary. If I had your candour, I should treat that author as he has treated Le Long, Wetstein, and Mr. Griesbach. But my candour is content with supposing it a misprint for No. 14,

If you had the candour in your heart, which you have so often in your mouth, that you have made the very word odious (*which was an excellent word before it was ill-sorted), she would teach you to charge no man with absurdity or falsehood, till you had tried every probable supposition to make his words rational and consistent; she would teach you not to wring a contradiction out of two testimonies, because one says less or more than the other; she would teach you not to be severe upon pardonable and unimportant mistakes; she would teach you (and illustrate the doctrine by your own example) not to be unmerciful upon authors, because their printers happen to be dull or lazy rogues, and put one letter, figure, or word, for another.

Let us return to Wetstein's ζ. Mr. Griesbach, finding this MS. marked No. 2242 upon the Gospels, and 2241 upon the Epistles, seems to have suspected some mistake, and therefore says doubtfully on the former Reg. 2242, nunc 49, ut videtur, aut etiam 47; on the latter, Reg. 2241, nunc ut videtur 47. But if he had compared Wetstein's note on 1 John v. 7, he would have seen that 2241 was a false print for 2242.

10. With

10. With respect to Stephens's No. 15, if Le Long had added, that it contained the Apocalypse, there would have been no real difference between him and Wetstein: Le Long, presuming that Stephens collated the MS. throughout, says, from the evidence of the margin, that it only contained such and such Epistles. Wetstein, finding the MS. itself, says that it contained more, but was not collated to the other parts of the N. T. And then poor Le Long, forsooth, must suffer for having a better opinion of Stephens's accuracy, than fact and experience will justify.

11. What you say of Stephens's No. 14, is true, but nothing to the purpose. I take for granted that Wetstein is in the wrong, and that his errors are properly corrected by Mr. Griesbach, Symbol. Crit. p. cxliv—cxlviii. But because Wetstein judged wrongly concerning a collation that he received from others of a MS. that he never saw, how does it follow that he could not judge rightly of the MSS. that came under his own inspection? Except this single instance, all the examples you bring of Mr. Griesbach's dissent from Wetstein are lighter than air, and to mention is to refute them. 1. He contradicts Wetstein, because he has collated a MS. which Wetstein either did not see, or did not examine. 2. He contradicts Wetstein, because, the MSS. being lately arranged in a new order, he cannot positively tell what the present number of one of them is. 3. He seems inclined to differ from Wetstein concerning the identity of Stephens's No. 9 and Coishin. 200. A short observation will clear up these matters. Mr. Griesbach collated none of these MSS. which Le Long and Wetstein affirm to have been used by Stephens (except No. 8):

No. 8). He might perhaps look at them in a cursory 132 manner, without any design of making extracts or memorandums. His aim was to examine such MSS. as either came afterwards into the library, or had escaped Wetstein's diligence. He therefore speaks diffidently on the subject of the Coislilian MSS. Stephani 8, ut opinatur Wetstein. Seeing likewise an apparent inconsistency in Wetstein's account of No. 7, he intimates a doubt which a farther inquiry would have dispelled.

The remainder of your letter is a tiresome repetition of what you before borrowed from Martin. The substance of it is, that Stephens had fourteen MSS. to the Gospels, ten to the Acts, twelve to the Epistles, and four to the Apocalypse. You afterwards repeat the same assertion in another form, and palm it upon us for distinct evidence. Doubtless Stephens had as many MSS. if his margin never errs. But I informed you before, that his numbers are frequently confounded. I now inform you farther, that, of the numbers quoted by R. Stephens to the Gospels, Nos. 10, 11, 13, 16; to the Acts, 8, 14; to the Epistles, 2, 12, 14, 16; and to the Apocalypse, 5*, 11; are spurious.

Wetstein discovered, in his Prolegomena, 1730, p. 22—27, that Stephens's No. 2 was the same MS. that Beza gave our university. An anonymous opposer soon appeared, who, to prove the contrary, produced twenty instances, in which, according to him, they varied. Whoever desires to see what Wetstein answered, may consult the second edition of his Prolegomena, p. 28—38. I wish no greater harm, Sir, to your admirers, than that they may approve of this anonymous gentleman's arguments. If you had been then alive, you would have added, in aid of this critick's reasoning, that Stephens's No. 2 contained the Epistle to the Romans, and therefore, beyond contradiction, must be different from Beza's MS. which contains only the Gospels and Acts.

All this trumpery about Stephens's margin rests upon a modest assumption, that Stephens could not commit a typographical error. I produced, out of a great number of examples, and shall now briefly recapitulate, as many as I thought sufficient to confute so extravagant a position. Matth. xxiv. 20, it marked in the margin. 1 Pet. iii. 11, ἀγαθὸν ζητησάτω omitted in the text. Apocalyps. p. 176—177, eighteen various readings of the Complutensian edition omitted, and, of the nineteen marked, two inaccurate, and two false. The semicircle three times omitted; in one place twice printed, and the figure of reference once misplaced (correct my former collation.) Apocalyps. xv. 2, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ χαραγματος αὐτοῦ, for καὶ ἐκ τοῦ χ. αὐτοῦ. When you have shewn that Stephens's margin is correct in all these particulars, I will endeavour to exercise your sagacity with a few more of the same kind.

You might have spared yourself all this letter-hunting, if you had applied your assumption at first, and reasoned thus: The MSS. produced by Le Long and Wetstein are not the MSS. used by Stephens; for those omit from in cælo to in terra, inclusive; but these only omit in cælo. You have, indeed, repeated a part of this argument in your last letter, where you say, that all Stephens's MSS. retained in terra. The only witnesses you can bring to this assertion assertion are Stephens's margin and Beza's note. The appeal to Stephens's edition, when the question is, whether that edition be erroneous or not, is too gross a banter upon common sense. Nor can Beza's testimony be of any weight, till you can prove that he had the actual use of Stephens's MSS. But this you cannot prove, without making Stephens a thief and a liar. And when you have ruined his character, we will consider how much credit is due to his evidence.

You play your old game, when you say, "that the charge against Stephens is, that he collated his MSS. unfaithfully;" and afterwards, "that we accuse R. Stephens and T. Beza of a deliberate falsification of Scripture." I have told you over and over, that I only suppose R. Stephens to have committed an easy, and to appearance a small mistake. And I suppose, with Wetstein, that Beza adopted the mistake. Ista typhoetæ aberratio fraudi fuit T. Bezæ. If it be a deliberate falsification of Scripture to err in noting the various readings, God help the wicked*! For there never was a more abandoned set of men than the greatest part of editors and collators. The word unfaithfully is capable of two senses. If it means negligently, imperfectly, erroneously, I agree that Stephens collated his manuscripts unfaithfully; but, if it means fraudulently, I have acquitted him of that imputation.

Supposing that I surrendered Stephens's No. 7, what 133 would you gain by it? Nothing, unless you could shew that Nos. 4, 5, and 10, are different from the numbers

marked by Le Long as corresponding. But this you have not attempted to shew of No. 4; nor can you shew it of No. 5, and 10, without retreating to your strong-hold, the infallibility of Stephens and his compositors. And if you call this arguing, you may argue till doomsday. You are indeed in a distressing situation; for, if one only of the MSS. quoted by Le Long be one of the MSS. quoted by Stephens, your cause will be as effectually ruined, as if the whole seven were found. If you can confute the single proposition, that the King's MS. formerly 2871, now 106, is Stephens's No. 4, you will perform more service to your darling verse, than you have performed in your whole book and your last incomparable letter. For Le Long, Wetstein, Mr. Griesbach, and the compilers of the catalogue of the King's MSS.* are in a provoking agreement concerning this MS. and, what is more provoking, are not contradicted by Stephens's infallible margin. Attempt then this confutation without delay. Silence will be a proof of conscious impotence. And attempt it with candour and seriousness. Tinselled phrases and empty sarcasms will have no effect but to double the load that now lies heavy upon you†. In the mean time I abide by my first position, that the MSS. numbered 4, 5, 7, 10, by R. Stephens, are the same with the French King's MSS. which, in the time of Le Long, were marked 2871, 3425, 2242, 2870. You have said nothing in answer to these affirmations of Le Long and Wetstein, that has not furnished fresh proofs of the assertion which I formerly made, "that you possess not even the rudiments of criticism*."

I have now, Sir, I think, with wonderful patience and politeness, replied to all your objections. I might indeed have excused myself from the task. If, however, you continue, as you threaten, to abuse Mr. Urban's indulgence, I shall not condescend to honour you with a second reply, unless you submit to a certain previous condition, which, to me, appears reasonable.

In every controversy, the disputants on either side ought, before they resume the subject by way of defence or offence, to acknowledge all the mistakes of which they have been convicted by others; and all in which they have detected themselves. Now, Sir, I have fairly staked my veracity on several points, which materially affected your cause and your character. Since you have neither defended your assertions, nor confessed your mistakes; you ought to look upon the attention I have here paid you as a signal exertion of humility. You are a culprit at the bar of the publick. You have no right to an hearing till you have purged yourself from the former accusations. These I shall now state again, and leave them to the judgement of the reader. You asserted 1. that the Latin copies in 1 John, v. 8. read (with so few exceptions as not to merit notice added in the 2d ed.) tres in unum sunt. 2. That they invariably retain the clause. 3. You assert, by implication, that most of the Greek MSS. which omit the seventh verse, retain ἐν τῆι γῆι in the eighth; 4. that Wetstein allows six MSS. to retain the disputed verse. I asserted, and I still assert, 1. that no Latin copy whatever, retaining the clause, reads tres in unum sunt, but all simply tres unum sunt; 2. that a very great number (as far as I can guess*, a considerable majority,) omits the clause. 3. That no Greek MS., which omits the seventh verse, retains ἰν τῆν γῆν in the eighth; and 4. that Wetstein affirms four of the six MSS., to which you appeal, to omit the disputed verse; and professes to believe the same of a fifth. Besides these particular charges, I scattered a general accusation through my letters; that you had borrowed the greater part of your book from Martin, taking upon trust his facts and quotations. That this blind adherence to Martin had led you into many errors, some owing to the original, and some to the English translation. Unless you make haste to defend or confess, the publick will not fail to condemn your obstinacy, and take your silence for the certain token of a rotten cause and a guilty conscience.

his work Horne Tooke has not failed to avail himself of this leading hint in tracing upwards the primary meaning of the participle IT—HIT—HET—HÆC—HÆCAN—HÆITAN—nominatum, it is said. MILTON.

Milton was acquitted by R. P. of imitating Don Belianis in
P. L.

P. L. II, 879—883. In the first edition of this romance, which preceded the P. L., there are no traces of the passage referred to; whereas in the second edition, which followed the P. L., there are unquestionable marks of imitation.—It was R. P.'s opinion that the writer of the preface, postscript, and letter of contrition for W. Lauder, was neither willingly undeluded, nor forward in exposing the *atrocit*y of those hideous interpolations, by which it had been vainly contrived to obscure the splendor of Milton's PARADISE LOST. Whether R. P. ever stated to the late learned and venerable Bishop of Salisbury, the candid and merciful detector of those impudent forgeries, his persuasion on this point, is uncertain. It is, however, well known that R. P. possessed the friendship of this truly great and good man, who never suffered R. P.'s fame to be depreciated in his hearing by unmanly reflections on what are termed R. P.'s oddities, or by unprovoked censures on his treatment of those who were not entitled to his pity. From this fact a melancholy corollary may be drawn, viz. that the political atmosphere of Great Britain is not favourable to morality and religion.

P. 314. note, l. 3. r. Nicholson's; and l. 12. after Freind, insert, and Mr. Pope, who was in the secret, told Bp. Warburton that "Dr. King of the Commons wrote the droll argument (pp. 184—201) to prove Dr. Bentley was not the author of the Dissertation on Phalaris, and the Index." This "insipid banter" is, improbably I think, given to Dr. Smallridge by Dr. Salter; see also Atterbury's Corresp. 1, pp. 306. 505. Mr. Cole of Magdalen College, Oxford, compared the Answer to Bentley to "a Cheddar-cheese, made of all the milk of the parish." See Gibson's ed. of Camden's Britannia.

 [Cyrillus qui hodie Constantinopoli patriarchatum obtinet, vir pietate et eruditione insignis, ex Ægypto, cum sedem Alexandrinam relinqueret, magnam librorum suppellectilem secum advexit, inter quos codicem omnium vetustissimum, et longe pretiosissimum (in quo veteris et novi fœderis libri literis grandioribus, manu Theclæ nobilis fœminæ Egyptiæ, circa primi concilii Nicæni tempora, bellissime exarati sunt) per Ornatissimum et Cl. virum Dominum Thomam Roe Equitem auratum, et apud Turcarum Imp. Seremi Regis nostri Oratorem, cum ex oriente rediret, dono

- dono ad Sere^{mum} Regem nostrum transmisit," Patricius Junius benevolo lectori D. Clementis Ep. prioris ad Cor.; Oxonii pridie Cal. Nov. 1632. Qui credat viro justo et propositi tenaci—Patrick Young—in mentem unquam venisse, ut fugitivas litteras in illis membranibus subdole refingat, ne iste mecum haud sentit. Animum, queso, advertite quam religiose fragmentum situ corrosam et lacunis, quod maxime dolendum, passim intercisum ipse expresserit:
- “Legisque Pythagoricæ non immemores (quæ, ut Syne- sius in Dione auctor est, οὐκ εἶ τοῖς βιβλίοις ἐπιποιεῖν, ἀλλὰ βούλεται μένειν αὐτὰ ἐπὶ τῆς πρώτης χειρὸς, ὅπως ποτε ἔσχε τύχης. ἢ τέχνης) nihil dementes, nihil de nostro addentes, non syllabam, non literam, non apicem aut iota unum, fidelissimè, quantum fieri potuit, expressimus. Voces autem deperditas, et literas vetustate effusas, spatijs et interstitijs accuratissimè dimensis, pro ingenioli nostri tenuitatesupplevimus, et minio rubro (novo hoc et inusitato imprimendi genere) notavimus;”—Hoccine credibile, ut suspicione nulla virtute redempta codicem illum vir optimus contaminaret? Non dubium est quin manus male sedula in exteris oris delitescentem hac macula fœdaverit.
